RAMEY KNOCKED OUT IN 7TH

Portland Lands Hard on Former Local Schoolboy and Latter Is Compelled to Give Way to Killian, Who Falls to Save.

athletes ground out and mentally noted that Southpaw Ramey was inclined to wildness. Theroupan Bill witted and drew a walk. Ryan accepted his enthusiastic welcome by gritting his teeth and slamming a single into right center.

Rodgers cursed all the way to third base by dint of hard sprinting, and he scored a moment later when Kores smashed a stizzing liner through First Base man Ness.

Fiddling Ramey Goes.

That spoiled what otherwise might have been a neck-and-neck contest to the finish line. Thereafter the Beavers were always in the lead. After an uncouth carving, the fiddling Ramey was knocked clear out of kilter in the seventh inning and Jack Killian relieved him.

Jack soothed the Beavers momentarily, but in the eighth Bud Ryan's triple down the first-base line and a sacrifice fly by Kores scored the fourth run.

With a 3-0 lead behind him in the eighth, Higginbotham eased up temporarily and the experiment was not altogether a howling success. Elmer Zacher and Gus Hettling poked out hits on the heels of a single by Murphy, and two runs scampered across. That was in the eighth, mind you.

Captain Rodgers immediately waltzed in for a discussion with Higginbotham on the ground rules, the price of next spring's book beer, the Huerta flag salute, and other prime topics related distantly to baseball, and Hig litigated up like a cup defender in a stiff breeze.

Higginbotham Is Cool.

Aside from that symptom of combustibility and one earlier uprise in the fourth, Hig was as cool and collected as an Eskimo igloo in a blizzard. He twirled a great game of ball.

The massive hunk of pitching apparatus didn't try to fan every man up, but reserved his strength for the pinchers, remembering that Walt McCredie had eight others out there supposed to be driving revenue.

All told 11 Computers nipped Higginbotham for hits as against nine off Ramey and Killian.

Immediately after the ninth began the slow drill to the exits. There was little hysteria; little outward show of the jubilation that filled the local hearts, mainly because of the scarcity of really thrilling incidents.

But the fans had seen the Beavers at last, and most of them departed nursing the opinion that they will do as pennant contenders.

Little remains to be said except by way of gratifying those who demand details.

Here goes.

Details Start With Rush.

Portland scored one run in the first inning, one in the third, one in the sixth and the final tally in the eighth. Rodgers' walk, Kores' single and Kores' infield hit caused Oak depression to saturate the atmosphere in the first frame, as heretofore chronicled.

In the third inning a wild throw to first by Second Sacker Murphy, of the Oaks, put Speas on second base. Rodgers next emitted a base hit to left and the doughty captain and Speas pulled the first bit of electricity by a successful double steal.

No play was made on Speas at the plate, principally because Shortstop Cook dropped Mitz's snap throw in his haste to return the favor.

In the seventh inning this same Murphy fellow relayed wild to third base on a three-base swat to deep center by Bill Rodgers and Bill trotted home looking as important as an uninstructed delegate.

"Murphy Thorn in Flesh."

Murphy was considerable of a thorn in the side of his sidekick, Ramey, all day, but in this instance Rodgers would have scored anyway, as Ryan walloped a single into left just after Bill had slid his spikes across the bosom of the old home plate.

Southpaw Ramey also walked Lober in this crisis and Devlin immediately yanked him to the rathskeller under the grandstand, substituting Killian. Ramey left like March went out and also left Jack a heritage of three balls on Davis. Jack walked Bobby, filling the bases, but Fisher and Hig were easy victims, and the Oaks exorcised themselves from an almost painful dilemma.

Ryan's triple and Kores' sacrifice fly to short right field scored the fourth run. Portland tally in the last half of the eighth inning.

Chance of Redemption Slight.

Oakland's hopes then ducked into the deep, for there was slight chance of their overcoming a 4-2 handicap. And so it ended.

Doane furnished one of the spectacular features by a great catch of Cook's drive up against the fence in the fifth. Another cropped up in the fourth when the Oaks had the bases full with nobody out, as a result of a scratch hit, Zacher's double and a walk. Ness filed to Speas, and Mitz blasted the straggling Oak optimism by hitting into a sharp double play, Higginbotham to Fisher to Speas.

To those who were present when Portland and Los Angeles played their sensational 1-1 opening the game one year ago, yesterday's atmosphere was a little surprising, for it was not what might be termed a heart-breaker. But, the game counts as much as any other in the percentage reckoning.

After the conflict, Walt McCredie granted an interviewer a wide grin, and said: "It was a good game, wasn't it?" Indeed.

The score: Oakland—Portland—

ERRORS GIVE ANGELS GAME

Seals Unable to Hit, Too, When Hits Are Needed Most.

OAKLAND, April 16.—Errors by the San Francisco team and failure to hit when hits were needed most gave the game here today to Los Angeles. Perritt allowed more hits than Fanning, but the Seal pitcher allowed hits when they meant runs. Slovenly fielding, however, was the cause of San Francisco's first defeat in the series. The score:

KUBS PROVE SUPERIOR

BEARS WALKED ALL OVER, BUCKAROOS, TOO, ARE LOSERS.

Baker Swipes Bases by Wholesale and Game at North Yakima Filled With Sensations.

He struck out eight, and his team worked well behind him. The score:

Western Tri-State League Standings		W.L.P.C.
Walla Walla	5	Pendleton	4
North Yak.	4	Baker	3

At Walla Walla—Baker 7, Walla Walla 1. At North Yakima—North Yakima 5, Pendleton 4 (11 innings).

Baker took an awful fall out of Walla Walla's pride at Walla Walla in Western Tri-State yesterday, hammering Lund all over the field, swiping bases by wholesale and winning 7 to 1.

North Yakima continued to walloped Pendleton, taking the Bucks measure 5 to 4, but it took 11 innings to do it.

At Walla Walla the Cubs hit hard and often, annexing 14 hits, two walks and eight stolen bases and getting four of the seven as earned runs. Lund struck out ten in spite of it. Shockey went in as catcher for Walla Walla in the eighth and stopped the stealing. Shockey also got the Bears' only two hits and their lone run, that in the second. Meill pitched like a wizard.

BOOSTERS HAVE FUN

Parade Starts on Time and Enjoyment Is General.

TADS' BAND DOES JUSTICE

Curtain-Raiser at Park Provocative of Much Merriment but as to Result of One-Inning Game Views Are Varied.

Portland's baseball fans again get the credit for making up the population of one of the real live baseball towns on the Pacific coast. Each of the "stunts" planned by the baseball boosters went as scheduled.

The parade was a success. Promptly at 1:15 it swung down Morrison street and by 2 o'clock it was up at Fourteenth and Morrison streets, and the players and fans were headed for the park.

The first machines of the pageant contained George L. Baker, president of the Baseball Boosters, and President McCredie, of the Portland Baseball Club. The Oakland and Beaver teams followed them. Next came the Highballs, the team which played that startling one-inning preliminary to the Beaver game.

One of the hits of both the parade and the ceremony at the ball park was the fire-and-drum corps of the Spanish-American War Veterans. These little tads made up the noisiest part of the programme and added materially to the amount of steam present.

Curtain-Raiser Enjoyed.

Everybody had a lot of fun out of the Booster-Beaver game. Though no one would make affidavit to that effect it is said on good authority that the Boosters had the best of the game. Score, 2 to 1, in the fatal frat.

The Boosters had first bats, with Hayward and Milligan opposite. Dr. T. L. Perkins was the first up, and filed to second. He tried to come back for another "base," but was discovered by Dr. Anderson, amiable it were, and E. E. Larimore came up. Larimore slid at a couple of them. He has wonderful stability, and while in on one of his gyrations around the plate, connected with one and got to first. Dr. Fenton struck out. Ed Werlein was up next and he plastered one over through the field and maintained that he was entitled to a ton of coal for hitting some sign.

Carlisle Brings in Runs.

He wanted to start something on the strength of it, but finally was convinced that the ball fell 100 feet short of the sign. Carlisle singled and stole and also brought in Larimore.

Just then Lober began to howl as if the Beavers might be able to play a little baseball, but they were hardly on their feet when Harvey O'Bryan, H. Wallace, Kandler and E. Garrison all got hits and brought in some runs.

Somewhat that seems to be getting jumbled. Some one in that bunch made an error, but the scorers were unable to detect who. How long it would have gone on, no one knows. It is said that Dr. Anderson will never umpire another game in the Pacific coast.

The pennant-raising was attended to by George S. Shepherd and George L. Baker. This was Portland's fourth pennant-raising.

TENSE CROWD ORDERLY

DELAY OF OPENING DAY REDUCES ATTENDANCE OF FANS.

Good Nature Prevails and Ground Officers Have No Difficulty in Keeping Enthusiastic Jam Moving.

Though the crowd was smaller by several thousand than that of last year, much credit is due W. W. Metzger, the manager of grand stands, and Police Captain Harry Circle for the capable manner in which the people were handled.

At no time was there any confusion or excessive crowding. As fast as the fans arrived they were hurried through the gates and plenty of guides on the inside kept them moving from the passageways.

The crowd began coming shortly after 1:30 o'clock. At 2 o'clock there were hardly a thousand people in the grandstand, while the greater part of the big crowd passed through the gates and to the stands and bleachers after 2:30 o'clock. It was a good-natured gathering of loyal supporters of the game. The commonplace reports turned in to police headquarters last night by officers assigned to the ball park for duty proved this. The following is a fair sample:

"Captain of the Day Relief—Dear Sir: Took in game at ball park. I wish to report that there was nothing but the very best of order at my end of the field. I would suggest to the captain that the ball park be heavily policed every day, as riot is apt to break out almost any time."

Ninety blue-coated representatives of the law saw that the fans witnessed the game in an orderly way and left in and out of the stands in safety. The streetcar traffic for the most part was very well handled. About half the crowd walked down town.

The only delay occurred when half a dozen "pay-as-you-enter" got into the string. The heavy crowds necessitated the use of some of these slow-moving cars and before the "sure-get-the-nickels" were filled the whole string on Upshur street was hopelessly tied up for a time.

The wine production of the United States last year has been officially estimated at 43,500,000 gallons.
