The New York Sun, the most influential paper in this country, raid him.

The New York Sun, the most influential paper in this country, paid him the extraordinary compliment of an entire page review in a recent Sunday. "During the last few seasons," says that journal, "the Royal Italian Opera Company of Drury Lane London, has made an annual visit to Ireland, and upon the last occasion the leading tenor was Thomas Egan An Irishman tenor was Thomas Egan. An Irishman at the head of an Italian opera company does seem like a revolution."

Musical critics will appreciate the reputation of Egan when Drury Lane made him its leading tenor.

Egan has appeared in all the leading operas, but his specialty is Irish music, the sings all the ancient and modern National songs of Ireland, and his superb voice and interpretations thrill his audiences, not only in London and Dublin, but in New York, where he has won his latest triumphs.

It is certainly a matter of pride for the Irish people that such a star as Egan has appeared. He will carry on the tradition of Irish song and make Irish music known at home and abroad. PRESS COMMENTS. France (Nice)—Rigoletto was a veritable riumph for Egan.—Le Journal (Translaton), Brooklyn Standard Union—Egan is a tenor of true quality of voice, both as to timbre and register, and sings with feeling.

Brooklyn Times—He sings with an ease and confidence given him in the training of the European masters. To the strumming strings of his native instrument the singer swung through the Irish National songs as though he was sounding a slogan on a battiefield. The audience was held breathless—surely the man seemed matchless in this field.

Musical America—At once it was apparent that here was a tenor with a rarely beautiful voice, for seldom has the Serenads been so well sung at the Metropolitan. There are few tenors of any nationalities heard in this country who can command the fiery impetuosity and emotion that he can.—Adv.—Adv.
