The First Rehearsal.
THE players were assembling on the stage door the next morning. Marlan made her way timidly through the stage door the next morning. Ratzgenhauer greeted her warmly, deserting a group of people with whom he was talking when he beheld her.

"I'll introduce you to Wiltrise in a minute," he said, shaking hands. "I've warned him not to try any of his third-degree methods with you, little girl. Now, about your salary. We can't pay you a day, John C. C. Mayo, wealthiest man in Kentucky and Democratic National committeeman from Kentucky, is trying transfusion of blood as a last resort. He has been taken from his home in Paintsville, Ky., to the Jewish Hospital in Cincinnati, where he has leased an entire floor, and specialists from New York as well as Cincinnati are in constant attendance.

His brother, Washington Mayo, weighing 250 pounds, gave a pint of his blood twice, and Mayo seemed improved. It is believed, however, that his death is only a matter of a short time.

$75,000 SPENT FOR LIFE

Wealthy Man, Unknown 20 Years Ago, Pays Much to Delay Death.

LEXINGTON, Ky., April 18.—(Special.)—Fighting a battle against Bright's disease which is costing him $500 a day, John C. C. Mayo, wealthiest man in Kentucky and Democratic National committeeman from Kentucky, is trying transfusion of blood as a last resort. He has been taken from his home in Paintsville, Ky., to the Jewish Hospital in Cincinnati, where he has leased an entire floor, and specialists from New York as well as Cincinnati are in constant attendance.

Mr. Mayo has, it is estimated, spent $75,000 so far in his efforts to secure at least a postponement of his death. He is a remarkable character. Twenty years ago he was a penniless school teacher in the mountains of Kentucky. He saw possibilities of great wealth in the coal and timber regions there, and began leasing on a small scale and finally buying in a small way.

He gained the confidence of wealthy Easterners, of whom J. Pierpont Morgan was one. They put money behind him and he was able to care for his options.

Little Discussions OF Love and Marriage

By BARBARA BOYD.

The Seeing Eye of the Wife.
"HE is as blind as a bat about some things," the Matron was saying. "And his wife has that delightful tact that sees for him, and he never knows it."

"But," objected the Old Maid, "wouldn't it do him more good to point out to him the fact that he is blind, and so perhaps make him use his eyes?"

"Can you make a blind man see?" asked the Matron.
"One man did some two thousand years ago," replied the Old Maid, gaily, for her.
"That's true," admitted the Matron, "but the whole man was regenerated."

"I guess that's the crying need of many of our blind men," said the Old Maid, lapsing into her usual tartness. "Thorough regeneration is about the only thing that will enable them to see."

"But what I started out to draw your attention to," laughed the Matron, "was the fact that 'when man is blind,' as some poets put it, 'his woman sees.' Haven't you often noticed this among the married people you know? I knew a grocer once whose wife could always tell the people who would pay their bills and those who wouldn't. She seemed to have intuition about people. But her husband would never take her advice and so he lost money right and left."

"That's usually the way," cynically observed the Old Maid. "The men think they know it all and go right along doing things that a woman with half an eye sees is mighty poor judgment."

Murphy went to the river bank, where he sat for an hour, and then swam the stream to the opposite side, where he sought company at a neighboring ranch.

Four days later, when Hockett returned and found Murphy missing, he began a search for his mascot.

Standing on the river bank, he saw his cat swimming back. When Murphy reached the shore he jumped on his master's shoulder.

At the point where Murphy swam the river the stream is treacherous, and several men have been swept down the stream by the swift current.

In a letter received here from her she says:
"I intend to go into the woods on July 18 and to come out on September 14. I shall wear a pair of bloomers—nothing else—and I shall make a suit to come out of the woods in. My plan is to get my own living in the woods just to see whether a woman can do it as well as a man."

By Mrs. Janet McKenzie Hill, Editor of the Boston Cooking School Magazine

This is considered by many cooking authorities the finest cake that can be made, though in reality it is not at all difficult.

One cup butter; 2 cups granulated sugar; 1 cup milk; 1 teaspoonful rose water; 3/4 cups flour; 3 level teaspoonfuls K. C. Baking Powder; whites of 6 eggs, beaten dry.

Cream the butter and beat in the sugar gradually. Sift together, three times, the flour and baking powder, and add to the butter and sugar, alternately with the milk and rose water. Lastly, add the egg whites. Bake in three-layer cake pans. Put the layers together with the following frosting.
