A. J. KINGSLEY TO REPORT

MANUFACTURERS' ASSOCIATION TO HEAR OPINION ON INSURANCE.

Representative Attends Meeting in Michigan, But Thinks Alterations Will Be Necessary.

A. J. Kingsley, vice-president of the Manufacturers' Association of Oregon and chairman of the association's committee on workman's compensation, will make his report on his recent trip to the East at a meeting of the board of directors tonight.

The convention held at Lansing, Mich., April 13-15. "This convention was the most harmonious in its work that I have ever attended," he said, "although every conceivable shade of opinion was represented. There were insurance experts, delegates from the labor organizations, delegates from the manufacturers and members of the compensation commissions. Altogether 20 different states in which this system is in use were represented at the convention." Mr. Kingsley says that in most of the states where industrial compensation obtains, it is in high popularity, but he believes that there are several features in the Oregon law which will need alteration before the law will be brought to the highest stage of efficiency in public service.
