$2500, which he claims is a quarterly payment on an annual income of $19,000 which she promised him under an agreement signed July 15, 1912.

Werner's part of the contract, he says, was to "give up his career in the Police Department," to which he then proposed to return because of his wife's refusal to allow him to spend any money without her permission. All of her money, he alleges, was deposited in his name when they were married and he disbursed it for her expenses as she directed.

The complaint recites that Mra. Werner has an income of $75,000 a year, real estate worth nearly $1,000.000 and personal property amounting to $1,500,000. She required of Werner, he says, that he "should ask for any money required for his personal use before he drew check for same."

"It became intolerable," says the complaint, and he stated to her "that he intended to return to the Police Department, where he could earn sufficient for his wants." He then turned over the property and notified creditors to look to her for payment.

Interior and Exterior Views of the Newly Enlarged Meves Restaurant.

Once a Newspaper Man, Now a Leading Restaurateur

One stale egg will lose a customer. The moral is this; "Have only the best eggs, meats, coffees and everything else," remarked A. J. Meves, who has just thrown open to the public his newly-enlarged restaurant and lunch room, The Meves, at 311-313 Washington street, and 110 Sixth street.

Mr. Meves made the observation while briefly skotching the history of his career in Portland as a restauratour, which began in 1908. He has been highly successful—one of the most successful in Portland, and to see the big, clean place, one would hardly believe that he had only a few hundred dollars and a small lunch counter, with a scating capacity of ten, less than a decade ago.

Mr. Mayes formerly was a payman man at Dawner the second services of the second second services.

Mr. Meves formerly was a newspaper man at Davenport, Iowa, and at Denver. When he decided to come West he visited various cities in the Northwest and settled on Portland. He first purchased a small cigar store on Washington, between Sixth and Seventh, but, after holding it a few months, sold out, and in the Fall of 1908 opened the small Jersey Lunch Room at Sixth and Stark. There was just room for ten persons at the tables.

in 1909 he bought out the Vegetarian Restaurant on Sixth, between Washington and Stark, with a seating capacity of 65. In 1911 he sold it and took over the old Brunswick Restaurant at his present location.

He paid $15,000 cash for the Brunswick, and, equipping it brand new throughout, respend under the name of the new owner. Today The Meves, again enlarged, has a seating capacity of 350; the payroll is more than $500 per week, there are 44 employes, and last year Mr. Meves did a business of more than $150,000.

"What is the reason for your success?"

"What is the reason for your success?" "There's nothing mysterious," replied Mr. Meves. "Our food is prepared from the very best provisions, cooked by expert cooks and done under the supervision of an experienced chef. The second reason is this: Popular prices prevail. A quarter of a dollar will give you a first-class breakfast, lunch or club dinner. The third reason is the fact that I have been exceedingly fortunate in surrounding myself with efficient and loyal help. No man builds his success alone. He has to be helped by others."
