WORRIES ARE SHOWN

Club Burlesques Troubles of Railroad Manager.

MANY COMPLAINTS HEARD

Other Officials, Employees, a Book Agent and State Commissioner Take Turns in Keeping Executive of Line Busy.

Case of Delayed Train Told.

Harry Bastion, who played the part of the signal engineer, reported the cause of a delayed train and incidentally gave an instructive account of the workings of the familiar "block signal" system. A regular signal tower had been installed in the room for this purpose.

H. H. Keck, the car service agent, explained why it was impossible to fill the order of the "Shoestring Lumber Company" for cars, concerning which there had been vigorous complaint. The traffic department had promised a type of car that is not in existence.

About this time C. L. Fincke, impersonating a book agent, gained admittance to the general manager's inner office and a clever dialogue ensued.

J. I. Hemmings, inventor of a refrigerator car that "roasts peanuts in transit" gave a demonstration of his device, and the general manager meanwhile for his tax agent, who tried to explain the cause for a $500,000 increase in taxes. R. B. Hallock played the tax agent.

Mr. Moore's gruff and blustery tone as he used in addressing his private secretary and other clerical help immediately when he heard the voice of a member of the State Railroad Commission over the telephone, and he promised, in a mild and gentle voice, to paint all the stations orange, although he himself had intended to paint them green, and invited the Commission on a visit to the line.

G. W. Neilson, a typical statistician, appealed for additional clerical help to supply figures demanded by the Interstate Commerce Commission.

Finger Bowl Causes Complaint.

Then, further to vex the general manager, a passenger complained that a finger bowl supplied to him on one of the company's dining cars had been suddenly taken away from him, leaving his fingers unwashed.

C. E. Cochran, as attorney, advised that the finger bowl had been supplied since the train moved from Oregon into Idaho, and that finger bowls were prohibited in Idaho by law. In future he advised that finger bowls be used for washing faces and hands in states in which they were allowed and for drinking purposes where they are prohibited.

Although the characters and incidents were somewhat overdrawn, the proceeding served well to illustrate the workings of the average general manager's office, and, while intended primarily as an entertainment, contained, as Mr. Soule promised it would, "food for serious thought as well."

OUR Escrow Department will take entire charge of the closing of land sales, exchanges or loans, the complete proceeding being guaranteed by the resources of this company. This assures good titles, correct calculation of interest, insurance or rents, and payment to and vouchers from the person entitled to any money, including the identification of parties and securities concerned—all at maximum speed consistent with safety.

Title & Trust Co. Fourth Near Stark

A vaudeville show that was not booked on any theatrical programme and for which no admission was charged, but which contained the regulation "laugh in every line," was staged at the Multnomah Hotel at noon yesterday, with N. C. Soule as stage director.

The occasion was the regular bi-weekly luncheon of the Portland Transportation Club. Mr. Soule, who was chairman of the day, impressed upon the assembled railroad and steamship men something of the perplexities that the average operating official constantly is "up against."

To carry out this idea, G. E. Moore played the part of the general manager of a railroad. No sooner was Mr. Moore installed at his desk than his troubles began. John C. Albright, his secretary, was able to "stall off" some of the numerous visitors, but enough got by to keep the general manager constantly busy.

greatest storyteller, lives up to part of his title anyway. He is a great teller of stories—whether the greatest in the world couldn't be decided unless one heard all the others. Bush is a wizard, though, and tells bran new jokes. After he has worked his listeners into a state of signing byes, he gives an impression of a bibulous dame returning from Coney Island. His insight into the workings of the feminine mind is uncanny and his apparatus of voice is screams. Brown, who is so thin he says he serves as a model at a spaghetti factory, and a Miss Jackson, bewiling and teasing byes, she gives an act that takes a cake. Brown is a clubman and Miss Jackson a suffragette, and their exceedingly smart patter is hung on suffrage. Then Brown shoe-horns himself into an act-like messenger boy suit and does a spinnace dance. Their duet about a venture into vaudeville gets over great.

J. Edwin Crapo, who is a fine example of physical culture, gives a muscle demonstration in a spotlight against a purple curtain. He is the "Gladiator" in the act, which is further enhanced by the dancing of a "Nymph," an airy, fairy little toe-dancing maid. The two dance together as a finale, with Crapo whirling and tossing byes, the little dancer and posing beautifully.

The Four Military Maids appear first in smart evening frocks and then in military uniforms. They are excellent instrumentalists and their offerings vary from grave to gay.

Other officials, employees, a book agent and state commissioner take turns in keeping executive of line busy.

Military Maids Start Programme With Zip-Bang That Keeps Up Throughout Entertainment.

With a burst of martial music, four slender military maids dash onto Pantages stage and set the house a-buzz with a zip-bang that keeps up throughout the whole bill. The headline act is the seven Numbo Japs. They should call it Numbie Japs. They are boneless, their joints are of rubber and they can balance on their eyewinkers or their ears with equal agility. Like pin-wheels, they whirl about and do flip-flops that send shivers of fear along one's spine. There are seven of these regular Oriental wonders, all children save the director. Their costumes are magnificently ornate and the background curtain is a masterpiece in Japanese embroidery on heavy black satin.
