Divorced Life Helen Hessong Fuessle.

Marian Gets a Check. WITH feverish anticipation, Marian paused at a news stand the next afternoon and purchased a copy of the Chronicle. A wave of emotions that included satisfaction, shame, rejoicing and mortification almost overcame her when she saw her own picture, two columns in width, gazing at her from the printed page, surrounded by five half-columns of her job-hunting experi-ences and topped by bold, black head-lines. With a sick feeling she let her eye run down the headlines, which med thus from the page:

TWO WEEKS IN NEW YORK'S

Marian Winthrop, Job Hunter, Tells Vividly of Her Futile Quest for Work.

Beautiful Victim of Unemployment Assails Economic System Sharply.

The sensation of tawdry commonness which comes over every woman when newspaper publicity first comes whirling into her life, gripped and depressed Marian as she fied with the paper to the street and plunged into a perusal of the story. At a glance she saw that the first three paragraphs had been completely rewritten. She was aware that they were written with a profes-sional swing that was utterly allen and superior to the allowing paragraphs of her own comportence, she deveyes. As she is back and forth text and the picture it surrounded.

Having read the entire article, she felt proud of her achievement. Gradually the other consations were subsiding. She could hardly comprehend that all this had happened in the brief space of time beginning with her deci-sion to write to her brother to ask financial aid. Again her eye sped down the printed columns, and again there recurred that point of view that shrank from beholding in cold print the depiction of her bitter disappointment with New York, her struggles, shattered hopes and burning dreams. It is the invariable feeling that floods the soul of the novice who finds that her work has suddenly been hurled into type. Again, like on the night of her first appearance on the stage Merian. greatly benefit you.

A prominent candy manufacturer is quoted as saying: "We know we ought not to use coal tar dyes. No food maker should. They are poison. But the people want the brilliant colors that can be produced by no other means. If we use the non-poisonous, comparatively dull vegetable and fruit colors, it would be said that our candies were deteriorating. We should lose trade. Keep on There she found a leter under her door.

She read and reread the formal wording of the check. She thought of the HOME RULE PARADE TALKED and John McGreal. J. J. Kenny prehard week's toil she had put in under Ratgenhauer, the theatrical manager, for which he had promised but never paid her the sum of $15. And now, in hardly more than the twinkling of an eye, she had earned with brain and hand identically the same sum of money. At last she knew what she would do to strip divorce of its woes and pov-erty of its terrors. She would write. Already her brain was buzzing with ideas, vague plots and experiences that might be woven into marketable food for the printing-presses.

The virus of becoming a professional writer trickled into her arteries and sped through her body. The game called and beckened. At last she felt sure that she had struck her pace and found herself.
