The route of the two extensions will be out the Powell Valley road to the Swedish Church and thence to Orient. "House of Bondage" Film Is Denied Approval by Unofficial Board—City Officials Pass on Propriety Today.

Closed doors at the Heilig yesterday afternoon and night surprised and disappointed many persons who went there with the expectation of seeing "The House of Bondage," the photodrama motion picture adapted from the widely read story by Reginald Wright Kaufman. On the doors were posted the following notice:

"The film play, 'The House of Bondage,' has been postponed until tomorrow (Monday), subject to final passage by the censorship authorities of the City of Portland."

The picture was reviewed on Saturday afternoon by the unofficial board of censors, who declined to pass the film, leaving the question of its exhibition open for further investigation by the municipal magistrate and the Chief of Police. By the provisions of the city ordinance these two officials must view any pictures over which there is any question and their decision in the matter is final. It is expected that they will see the picture some time this morning.

Next he started for California, going to New Orleans and thence by water to Nicaragua. From Nicaragua he went north to San Francisco by boat. For a year he followed his trade in San Francisco.

At this time he had saved $1000, but this was lost in a bank failure. He spent three years mining in California, Amador and Trinity counties, but had no success. In 1858 he went to the Fraser River district, in British Columbia. After a few months an Indian uprising forced him to abandon his claim. From British Columbia he came to Portland. Here he began once more as a barber. In a few months he started to return to California, but his money gave out in Corvallis. Forced to remain there or continue his journey on foot, he opened a barber shop in that city, where he remained for 14 years. He purchased a half interest in the city of Portland, and he had opened a shop and a store which he had opened where he was destroyed by fire. After the fire Mr. Fliedner came to Portland. New Photo Plays Open

Baker.
 THE evil power of a woman over a man is depicted in "Samson," a stupendous photo production appearing at the Baker Theatre, where the Baker Players closed their season Saturday night. The plot is woven about the Biblical story. Samson marries a Philistine. The Philistines pursued him into the mountains, but he slew 1000 and the remainder fled. Delilah, a beautiful Circ of the Philistines, fascinated Samson and he fell a victim to her charms. Her people clamored to know the reason for his great strength. After a time he told her his strength lay in his hair. Delilah cut his hair while he slept and he was powerless. The Philistines overpowered and imprisoned him and put out his eyes. "But Samson killed more Philistines in his death than he did in his life," for an angel of God crumbled the pillars of the palace. The Philistines were defeated.
