Dr. Cabot's treatment of the first of these four elements, Dr. Dyott drew the following deductions:
We are in a world where work, rather than idleness, is a privilege.
"Second, no man has a right to be habitually idle and unemployed persons whether they be 'idle rich' or the poor who are 'out of a job,' are a menace to that botter condition of life toward which the human race is struggiling. We need a readjustment of the social and economic orders, and evolution rather than revolution should bring this to pass.
"Third, the best rewards of work are in life's own compensations, be yond pecuniary considerations. While we are in a material world, we must have material things, but the greater rowards are in the deliverance from a self-centered life, in the development of character and capabilities, which the fact that we live more abundantly."
Dr. Dyott will continue his discussion of Dr. Cabot's book through a series of sermons.

"Christians ought to be consistent We should not paironize the grocery stores and buy cigars, milk and cream on Sundays and then condemn the stores for keeping open. We should not go on fishing excursions Sunday be-cause the rates are lower. "The Subbath is one of the important institutions of this country.
