which were fully justified by recommendations of the Army engineers, among them being the appropriation for Willapa Harbor. The committee was particularly strong in cutting out Florida Items.

The members of the committee figured that ordinarily the new items attached to the bill by the Senate would be objected to by the House when the bill was sent back for final adoption, and to hold down the total amount carried and at the same time provide itself a good sound basis for compromise the committee cut out a goodly number of House items.

Their theory is probably correct.

But the Senate committee failed to reckon on one thing. The Senatorial primaries were held in Florida three days after the commerce committee completed its work on the river and harbor bill. News was telegraphed to the Florida thems had been cut from the bill, notwithstanding all the House items had the indorsement of the War Department. Senator Fletcher even then was winding up his campaign, and his enemies were quick to demand to know what he was doing at Washington to permit the committee thus to discriminate against his state.

Reports from Florida have said Senator Fletcher narrowly escaped defeat at the primaries, because so many Florida appropriations were cut out of the river and harbor bill.
