

CAMP AT GEARHART GREAT UNIVERSITY

Militiamen Students, Army Officers Teachers and Their Troops Are Models.

COURSES KEEP ALL BUSY

Mechanics of Game to Be Featured Throughout Gathering and Battle Exercises Will Replace Maneuvers of Campaigns.

CAMP JACKSON, Gearhart, Or., July 14.—(Staff Correspondence).—An immense military university under canvas fittingly describes the concentration of Army and National Guard troops now mobilized here.

Military science is the subject of study, and the courses in the technique of fighting occupy officers and men from sun-up until dark.

It is the mechanics of the game that will be featured throughout the camp. The importance of this was emphasized by Lieutenant-Colonel Morrison, the camp commander, in urging organization commanders to perfect the units under their command so as to have perfect control at all times.

"Right Way Must Be Only Way." Twenty-five years may be spent in going over these drills and instruction work in time of peace.

You can't cover the whole subject of military science in a few days nor in a few years, said Colonel Morrison, but you can get started off right on the mechanics of the thing.

Militia Viewed as Good Material. Army officers point to the Oregon troops here as affording excellent material for effective war service.

Battery A, Oregon Artillery, is rated as one of the crack batteries of the entire National Guard. The cavalry troop, although a new organization, has many veterans and former soldiers in the ranks and is making an exceptional showing.

Attendance Record One. Despite the fact that it was announced in advance that the gathering would be an arduous one, with no spectacular events and few diversions, a checking of the several Oregon organizations showed that the attendance is the largest on record.

Company B, of Portland, has the largest turnout with a total of 64. Company H, Portland, is second with 50 men. The Artillery Corps detachment of the Third Oregon is in camp with a 100 per cent turnout, notwithstanding the fact that it was organized less than two months ago.

DUCKS FIND PLACER GOLD Nuggets in Gizzards Lead to Discovery of Deposit Near Eugene.

EUGENE, Or., July 14.—(Special).—Gold nuggets, found in the gizzards of ducks, prompted a search that yesterday resulted in the finding of a placer gold deposit on the farm of W. C. Inman, janitor at the Lane County Courthouse. The place is 13 miles west of Eugene.

The ducks were traced to a small creek, and here other nuggets were found in the sand. A quantity of the sand, taken up with a postauger, was panned and a teaspoonful of gold recovered.

Prospectors are now searching for the ledge from which it is believed the placer deposits have come.
