not by King George, according to those Unionists, and the premier's one and only object was to gain time and prevent a provisional government in Ulster being constituted until after Parliament had adjourned, thus avoiding criticism of his followers and possible defeat on division.

Sir Edward Carson, leader of the Ulsterites, took the calling of the conference calmly. He told his colleagues it could make no difference in his attitude. He added that he had yet to hear an answer to his challenge to the Cabinet to "give us a clean cut or come and fight us," and that under no circumstances would he accept less than the exclusion of Ulster from the provisions of the bill. Sir Edward added that he could do nothing else, as he had given his promise to the as he had given his promise to the covenanters and intended to stay by that promise.

GIFT TO BOYS REPENTED

The Superintendent said six had been given five-year certificates to teach in primary schools and 28 to teach in higher grades. Virtually all applications made this year to teach in high schools were by college and university graduates, as a result of the higher qualifications required by the State Superintendent. The following is a list by counties of the successful applicants at the recent examination who have been issued certificates:
