Mrs. George Hodder, Jr. (Constance French) has returned from an interesting visit to Eastern friends. She will return to her home, Mrs. D. M. French, a motor trip and numerous informal affairs made Mrs. Hodder's visit pleasant.

WHAT ANNE RITPENHOUSE SAYS NEW YORK, July 18.—Last February when Callot made a frock of blue tulle based on taffeta, the skirt flounced from waist to ankle, the ruffles edged with a big band of taffeta, the whole looked at it askance.

A well-known American woman asked the question of Camille, the premiere vendeuse of the house, and she answered: "You will be glad to have to do it before Summer comes." But the world went on wearing tunics for a few months. Now Paris whispers that it is a bit tired of the way in which the department shops have put these gowns into the hands of those who wear them.

The American woman, who was not quite sure of herself in the flounced blue skirt, is now quite pluming herself on its possession. So goes the world of fashion. One has to take a dressmaker along with a new gown to alter it to the mode of the hour between wearing and pursuing.

Neither the pleated tunic nor the ruffled are as becoming as pleating that hangs straight from the waist to the ankles, for both of these fashions are exaggerating thereby the narrowness of the ankles.

Other women let them drop against the figure where they look as soft as pleatings.

Lace and Tulle Ruffles. The incoming fashion for lace assists in making ruffles popular. The manufacturers are weaving it in just the right widths of the waist and it is successful and cool over a lining of peach pink satin.

Black lace flounces, eight of them, are mounted on a king's blue satin lining, with a bodice of narrow lace and running across the figure, somewhat as the wrinkles ran across the modern basque. There is a high and low girde of king's blue ribbon fastened with a pink rose in the middle of the back.

Organdie frocks have six flounces on the skirt, each edged with narrow lace or a pale tone of ribbon in the old fashioned way.

Ruffles are also used on short taffeta coats, on capes of silk and chiffon.

SOME SUMMER DELICACIES. Fruit Soup—As an appetizer, try a little cup of cold soup, after the German fashion, made from cherry or currant juice, thickened with a little sugar or arrow root and seasoned with a little salt, white pepper and sugar to taste.

The fruit is washed and one pint of juice and pulp is used to one pint of water. Sometimes it is not thickened, and in that case a lemon with its juice and grated yellow rind, a little cinnamon and sugar are added. Some cooks mix half a cup of sherry to a quart of soup. This, too, is served in cups and garnished with a little of the whole fruit.

Spinach Souffle—Cook four pounds of spinach in the usual way, and after draining all the moisture from it, pass through a wire sieve. Take a tablespoonful of any cooked turnip, carrot or onion which may be in the cooler, and pass through a sieve. Add them to the spinach with two tablespoonfuls of thick white sauce and two ounces of warm butter. Season the mixture with salt, sugar, pepper and grated nutmeg.

Ice Cream Cheese and Tomatoes—Mix half a pint of aspic jelly which is cold but not set with four ounces of grated cheese and two tablespoonfuls of sieved tomato thickened with flour and butter. Season with celery salt, cayenne and a dust of curry powder and stir in half a pint of whipped cream.

Beat the mixture for a few minutes, pour into a china dish and place on ice long enough for the souffle to become very cold. Just before it is served, cover the top of each with strips of paper or small green string beans, boiled until tender in salted water, is another fine salad for a hot day. Copyright—The Adams Newspaper Service. An Anxious Day. Calhoun, the moody Atlantian, Marian prolonged her stroll for over an hour, exploring nooks and bends of the river-bank. She was heartily remorseful that she had purposely let-

Calhoun on, and allowed him to become sentimental. She realized now that she had undoubtedly made a great mistake in stirring this impetuous fellow up, and then throwing cold water on his ardor. He was different from the types of men she had the most to do with in the past. She was genuinely sorry for him, and thoroughly sorry that she had permitted the first manifestation of his sentiments.

"Well," she concluded philosophically, "he'll take a few more drinks and forget that I ever lived."

Nevertheless, she was disturbed by vague fears which his parting words had imparted and impressed upon her. Returning to the inn after her rambles, she beheld at a distance the inn's automobile start for its morning whirl to the railway station. She caught a fleeting glance of Calhoun, the only passenger, clambering into the touring car, followed by his bags, which one of the inn's attendants swung into the car. The horn of the motorcar footed, and the vehicle sped off in cloud of dust.

"So he's left," murmured Marian under her breath.

"Why this sudden departure of your friend, Mr. McCarron?" she inquired. "I'm off very much to my room, a moment later, when Marian encountered her in the inn.

"His departure?" asked Marian innocently.

"Mr. Calhoun's. He's just gone. And you not here to bid him good-bye?" smiled the other.

"I'm off very much to my room by the morning mail, I presume," returned Marian, wondering whether she was succeeding in concealing the consciousness she could not help feeling.

"Something extremely important, no doubt," returned the other woman. "He looked very much preoccupied, and rushed off without making any farewells at all. Interesting sort of a chap, wasn't he? Peculiar though."

"I should never have come to this infernal place. I might have known better. I'm off very much to my room. So shall I. I don't suppose you will, but should you feel any curiosity about me, you might watch the newspapers. Good-bye."

"THE FOOLISH BOY." As the sentences of Calhoun's brief note sifted into Marian's consciousness, her emotions bounded into a turmoil of fears.

What absurd and incredible thing was this youth going to perpetrate? She dared not anticipate, proceed, and she dropped into her chair with a sick feeling. She upbraided herself unmercifully for her attempt to play with the fires of the young Southerner's affections. Neurotic remorse for her act raced and swirled through her brain.

The premonition which his last spoken words to her had brought into being writhed into a score of dark and shocking pictures. She covered her face with her hands, but the unwelcome film spun with renewed velocity before her mental eye, filling her with terror, making her wish she had never been born.

Tomorrow—Women—the Burden-Bearers.

Falling Hair. F. WRITES, "Please publish in the health department the cause and the remedy, if any, for falling out of the hair."

Reply. The principal cause of falling out of the hair is dandruff of the scalp. Dandruff of the scalp is a symptom of a disease, and eventually it destroys the hair follicle. When a hair follicle once is destroyed it is just as impossible for it to grow a new hair as it would be to grow on a new leg. The hair may fall out following some severe sickness, but it gradually grows in again. The best way to keep the hair from falling out is to keep the scalp free from dirt and dandruff. The hair should be washed and shampooed at least once a week. Hair tonics are worthless so far as making the hair grow in. Use a mild soap on the scalp. If the dandruff is bad soak the scalp with olive oil the night before shampooing. If the disease of the scalp has not advanced beyond the hair falling out again, but hair tonics, restorers, renewers and hair-growing appliances are largely frauds. Cleanliness is the best condition to keep the hair in a healthy condition.

"Much in Little." A. H. M. writes: (1) Is sassafras tea a blood purifier? (2) Is there anything to take and how long, and how often? (3) Which is the best to use for the family, beet or cane sugar? (4) Does it injure a person to eat much sugar and sweets? (5) Will eating lots of fruit of all kinds, such as pears, oranges, blueberries, etc., into the blood, and makes the kidneys more active. The kidneys are the best blood purifiers of all the organs of the body, then the skin and lungs are the purifiers. The kidneys do their best all the time to throw poisons out of the blood. Pure food, pure water, pure air, pure clothes and a pure skin will keep the blood pure.

(1) It is not a blood purifier, but a sassafras tea does no harm and it gets more fluid into the blood, and makes the kidneys more active. The kidneys are the best blood purifiers of all the organs of the body, then the skin and lungs are the purifiers. The kidneys do their best all the time to throw poisons out of the blood. Pure food, pure water, pure air, pure clothes and a pure skin will keep the blood pure.

(2) Not in the least. If there is anything in diet to influence rheumatism for worse it is not the fruits and vegetables that one eats, but the meats and other high-protein foods. It is a mistake to think that one can eat too much of the fruits and vegetables. The best foods for health and strength are the foods that the Creator made for man. Because a man works hard in his business, he must eat a strong food. We still have some of the feelings of the savages who eat the hearts of their enemies to give them more strength and courage. It is a scientific fact today that to eat a piece of a strong ox does not make a man stronger and enable him to do more work with less fatigue. It is a man who works hard needs to eat more than a man who sits in an office. So, eat plenty of vegetables, cereals, bread and butter, milk and eggs, and do not eat the simple diet gives the most strength and less weariness.

(3) It is not better, but it is not worse. It is not an absolute disease producer. If you wish to get a start on the way to health let them alone. If you are below weight for your time, take a vacation and eat foods that will add to your weight and at the same time make you feel better. The best of all is a very difficult breathing.

GETTING A START BY NATHANIEL C. FOWLER, JR. (Copyright, 1914, by the McClure Newspaper Syndicate.)

Making Memoranda. NO matter who you are, what you are, where you live, or what you are doing, you should keep a diary and make memoranda of appointments and the things that you are to do.

Even the best memory is treacherous and cannot be depended upon. The making of an engagement, or inattention to any other matter, reflects upon your integrity and your business acumen.

A calendar with a memo pad for each day is always to be had. It is a very handy thing to have. Let us suppose, for example, that your life is insured, and that you have a policy for $10,000.00. Enter in your diary the date of payment, and then make a memorandum on a preceding date a week or so ahead, calling attention to the date of payment.

You should consult your diary or calendar daily, running your eyes over the dates a week or two ahead, in advance of the time that you are to attend to them. Things will occur to you, which do not require entering upon any special date. And furthermore, you will give subsequent attention. Make memoranda of them on some date which seems to be suitable, or enter them in the back of your diary.

Let us suppose, for example, that a friend recommends a tailor. You are not in need of clothes, but you give directions to the tailor to make you a suit of house or tailor. Enter the name of this man, whom your friend recommends, in the diary at about the time you think of making a suit. Make a memorandum of his name on the address page of the book.

If you are in business, either for yourself or for some one else, never be without a daily memorandum pad calendar, and enter whatever occurs to you as soon as you think of it. Your employer may request you to do some thing which does not require immediate attention. Enter it at once. The chances are even that you will forget it if you do not.

When there is a certain duty, which are to be attended to at specified dates, enter them on your pad calendar in the proper place, and a month or more in advance.

You hear of a book worth reading, but have not time to purchase it immediately or to take it from the library. Make a memorandum of it. If you keep a diary, do not do it as a friend of mine did. He recorded everything with the utmost precision and seldom returned to it. He died in the future, but the former practice is not to be discouraged, for often you would like to know when you visited a certain place or did a certain thing, and your record of it may be of importance to you.

Do not destroy your memoranda.

Do not destroy your memoranda.

Do not destroy your memoranda.

SNAPSHOTS BY BARBARA BOYD. "I'm so fussy about little things," the Young Married Woman was saying. "He irritates me beyond endurance sometimes."

"And then, I suppose," said Grandmother, "you say things that are as irritating to him as his fussiness is to you."

"Yes, I do," confessed the Young Married Woman. "But one can't stand everything."

"And where do you suppose this running will take you?" suggested Grandmother.

"The Young Married Woman looked somewhat blank. 'I do not know as I ever thought of that,' she admitted. 'Think of it,' advised Grandmother. 'People do not stand still you know. Will you grow more and more irritable? Will you have more and more petty quarrels to grow gradually into larger ones? Will the atmosphere of the home reflect this discontent and irritability?'

The Young Married Woman looked grave. "But what can one do?" she asked.

"In the running of things in this world where there is apt to be friction or bumps, there is a little thing known as a buffer. It takes the shocks and prevents injury. The home needs a buffer; for after all it is a complex bit of machinery for there are many delicate bits of mechanism about it."

"I hope you don't expect me to be the buffer," indignantly protested the Young Married Woman.

"No, dear, the buffer in the home is a mental thing known as concession. When there is no principle at stake, when those things Jim wants or criticizes are, as you say, little inconsequential matters, concede the point and forget it. Suppose he does want you to keep the cat outdoors. You don't really care whether the cat is outdoors or in, it's really not worth quarreling about. Suppose he does want his shirt put in a certain drawer. What difference does it make to you whether you put them in the top or bottom drawer or whether you hang them up? Suppose he wants to see you at a certain time. They may mean something to him. They mean nothing to you."

"But won't he get to be over-weening, so there will be no principle at stake, queried the Young Married Woman.

"I don't think so. If you see there is danger of this, or if he invades your territory in a principle at stake, or where rights of yours are concerned and he should compromise as well as you, then it will become another matter, and you should talk over with me. It seems to me if you remove all cause for his fussing over these little things, I believe his irritability will go away. And furthermore, I think that when he sees you are really anxious to please him in these little things, only will his love for you deepen and grow stronger, but he will grow ashamed of fussing over these peccadilloes from within and without."

"It's rather a hard thing to do though," sighed the Young Married Woman. "I'm no saint."

"But it's worth while to have a serene, happy home, isn't it? And if you make these little concessions from such an overflowing love that you want to do everything possible to make your husband happy, there will be no sense of hardship there. And in the bargain, if you think it takes a certain amount of saintliness to do it, you will be helping yourself to acquire this desirable quality."

"It works out beautifully in theory," smiled the Young Married Woman. "I'll see how it will go in practice."

THE SANDMAN STORY FOR TO-NIGHT BY MRS. F. A. WALKER.

MR. POSSUM VISITS MR. BEAR. Part II. AS I told you yesterday, Mr. Possum found himself very sticky and felt very uncomfortable, but knowing that Mr. Bear was liable to awake at any moment, he did not stop long to think about being uncomfortable.

He opened the pantry door a little and looked out. He could see Mr. Bear now as well as hear him, and he yawned and carefully past him to the door and drew the bolt.

With something, Mr. Possum shook himself. He was not used to it; he could not make himself feel right.

"I'll go down to the river," said Mr. Possum, "and see what is the matter with me."

So down to the river he went, but when he saw his reflection Mr. Possum almost tumbled into the water. He looked like a bundle of leaves and sticks, for the molasses had made everything he touched stick to his coat, and he was wondering what he could do when he heard the sound of dogs barking. Mr. Possum ran, but he saw the dogs coming, and forgetting all about his covering of leaves hiding him, he rolled over on his back, playing dead.

The dogs came along and sniffed at the leaves, then they barked again, and Mr. Possum thinking his end had come this time, did not wait for the man with the gun, whom he was sure would follow, but when one of the dogs began to paw the ground, Mr. Possum wondered if he could frighten them, and he jumped up and ran for a tree.

The dogs seeing this queer object running ran after it, but this time Mr. Possum did not stop until he was safe in the tree.

"Ha! ha!" laughed Mr. Possum, "I fooled them that time; this disguise is so good, after all." Mr. Possum slept that night with his new coat on, but in the morning he began to think it did not seem so much fun, because he did not meet any more dogs and hunters to fool, but how to be rid of it was the question.

Mr. Possum wanted his breakfast, so he walked along, thinking he would call on Mr. Fox, as he might be able to tell him how to get rid of the leaves so that he could wear his coat, and he would not share his breakfast with him.

When Mr. Fox opened his door and saw the strange-looking creature standing there he closed it with a bang right in Mr. Possum's face.

"Oh, Mr. Fox! Mr. Fox! Don't be afraid of me, because I did not meet any more dogs and hunters to fool, but how to be rid of it was the question."

"What has happened to you?" asked Mr. Fox again.

"I rubbed it all over my head and body, and then I rolled in dry leaves, and while I am much better this morning, I can't get rid of these leaves. Now, what I want is your advice; you know what I shall do to get this off my coat."

"Well, sit right up here close to the fire and get warm first," said Mr. Fox, "and we will see what can be done for you."

After Mr. Possum had sat by the fire for awhile he felt as if something was wrong with him, and he rolled in dry leaves, and while I am much better this morning, I can't get rid of these leaves. Now, what I want is your advice; you know what I shall do to get this off my coat."

SHERIFF SUED FOR $40,000. M. F. Berendes Accuses Deputies of Assault and "Undue Zeal."

Damages aggregating $40,000 are asked in two suits filed yesterday against Sheriff Word. It is charged that two deputies, serving a writ of eviction, committed assaults upon two complainants, injuring and humiliating them.

M. F. Berendes filed both suits, one in his own behalf and the other for his aged mother, of whom he is guardian. It is alleged that Deputy Sheriffs Frank Rogers and G. C. Lardford went to the home of Mrs. Berendes in August, 1913, and assaulted Matilda A. Berendes, striking her and tearing her clothes, "making her sick, sore and ill." It is also charged that the deputies used undue zeal in the case of the son, M. F. Berendes, violently assaulting him and taking him, handcuffed, to the county jail, without warrant. Damages of $2000 are asked by each of the plaintiffs.

WOMAN FRIGHTENS ROBBER. Burglar Runs and Drops Pocket-book When Mrs. Camp Screams.

A burglar entered the rooms of Mr. and Mrs. F. W. Camp in the Willmar Apartments, 742 Everett street, early yesterday. Awakened by a slight noise, Mrs. Camp screamed, frightening the man away.

Two watches and a Knights Templar charm were taken. A pocketbook, which the man picked up from a table, was found in the hallway below where he had dropped it as he fled. The man carried a gun, said Mr. Camp. The police were notified, and a squad was on the scene soon. Other people living in the apartments declare the burglar is a man whom they have seen hanging around the building on several occasions recently.

Commissioner Lightner Offers to Resign if Trust Found Betrayed.

That the three judges named by County Commissioner Lightner in his recent challenge to Commissioner Holman compose the "bug jury" committee of the joint investigation commission lately formed by the Non-Partisan and Taxpayers' Leagues was the information given Commissioner Lightner yesterday in a letter from that body.

Commissioner Lightner named George Mason, Paul Sealey and Charles D. Mahaffie as arbiters and his proposition was that if the pending investigation of county affairs shows that he has betrayed the county interests in any way for his own gain while acting as County Commissioner, he would resign from office.

REGULARS ARE HIKING HOME. Regiment From Vancouver Barracks En Route From Gearhart.

ASTORIA, Or., July 23.—(Special.)—The regulars who have been attending the annual encampment at Gearhart Park are en route to Vancouver Barracks. To night the troops are camped on the Heese farm, about four miles south of Astoria. Tomorrow morning they will start on the second leg of the 120-mile march via the Nehalem Valley.

The hike is to be under campaign conditions and the regiment will reach Vancouver next Friday.

CITY CARS TO BE LABELED. Public Works Has Plan to Stop Joyriding by Identifying Signs.

To eliminate joyriding in city automobiles the department of public works has presented a plan to paint, in large red letters, on the hood of all city cars the word "City of Portland" and on the car doors a large, red city trademark.

Various methods of preventing the use of the machines for private purposes have been suggested. The new plan will be recommended to the City Commission.
