ANTWERP, Aug. 23 .- A huge crowd gathered in front of the army headquarters here to see the arrival of Ger-quarters here to see the arrival of Ger-man prisoners, brought back in an ar-mor-plated automobile by a Belgian officer, Lleutenant Henkart. I got hold of Henkart this morning just as he way starting for his daily hunt, and had difficulty in inducing him to give me a brief account of his recent achievements. recent achievements.

Services Offered at War's Opening. He was formerly an officer in a regiment of grenadiers. He had re-tired from the army and was living tired from the army and was living the quiet life of a country gentleman, when, immediately on the outbreak of war, he again volunteered for active service. He was at once attached to the General Staff, and he presented to the government two armor-plated motor cars, each armed with mitrail-leues.

Leutenant Henkart perhaps may claim a larger number of thrilling ad-ventures and hairbreadth escapes than any soldier of recent times, but his any soldier of recent times, but his chief title to fame may prove to be that he has practically devised a new offensive weapon of great efficiency, and that he has conclusively demon-strated its conclusively demonstrated its great possibilities. The Lieutenant has already proved that an armor-plated motor car is an that an armor-plated motor car is an even more powerful weapon than the aeroplane. The Belgian army is al-ready building a large number of ar-mor-plated motor cars, of which in due time Lieutenant Henkart will take supreme command. supreme command,

Uhlans Are Target.

Unlaws Are Target. He has now been at his game of Uhlam hunting for the last seven days. It ought to be kept in mind that the killing of Uhlans is a mere incident of his expedition. His main object is to reconnoiter the positions of the enemy. He discovered defensive positions of the Germans on the Ambleve and Ourthe rivers and succeeded in rescuing two French horsewomen and killing five Uhlans. He visited on August 16 the battlefield of Haelen, the scene of one of the se-verest fights of the campaign, and found the defensive positions of Cu-

Trenchments. For the first time he familiarized himself with the methods employed by the Germans. Whenever they take the offensive, he says, they build en-trenchments, or, to be more accurate, they get entrenchments built by the peasants themselves. Not only do they commandeer the labor of the in-habitants, but he asserts that they put the unfortunate peasant in front of their troops, so that if the Belgians open fire, the peasants will become the n fire, the peasants will become the first victims.

Lieutenant Henkart on August 20 went to Waterloo. This was the red letter day of his experience. It ended almost fin a fatality for the reconnol-tering party, which found itself con-fronted by two companies of cyclists and a squadron of cavalry. These num-bered altogether about 450 men. It was too bete for refrect too late to retreat.

Fortunately, the Germans did not realize their position and were un-aware that it was not an important Belgian force.

At Hofstade, near Malines, he met a party of 24 Uhlans. He says he killed 21 of them, while three were drowned valu and seven wounded. Of the latter five were brought back to Antwerp. This gave rise to the popular reception al-ready referred to. I have had several interviews with M. Carton de Wiart, Minister of Jus-brought to light. The Commissioner of Police says he has seen six defenseless peasants shot

The system of raiding by small before his eyes. The system of raiding by small bands may be conducive to the mobil-ity of Germans, but it seems to be de-structive equally of military discipline and elementary humanity.

Belgian Army Feverish.

I visited yesterday the cantonments of the Belgian army within the fortifi-cations. I found the morale of the troops excellent. Among others I saw a goodly number of the defenders of Liege, and, although they had had only a week's rest after the horrors of siege, they were already burning to take the offensive once again against the Germans. Later today I saw several leading members of the Belgian government and some commanding Generals, who were all satisfied that the situation remained most favorable for the allies.

mained most favorable for the alles. (Here the message is censored.) The occupation of Northern Belgium by the Germans resolves itself mainly into a succession of raids, which inflict the measurement of suffering with a miniximum of suffering with a minimum of results.

These are ques-tions which it is easy to ask, but hard to answer. In the first place, she would presumably come by night, in the hope of escaping observation. But although she might arrive unperceived, in spite of searchlights, and might conceivably do a certain amount of damage if she dropped her bombs with unexpected accuracy (and this would be difficult in the dark), having dropped them (and the bigger they were the fewer they would be), she would simply have to go away again.
