"My Official Wife," at the Globe Theater, is the best Vitagraph seen here. The story, intensely interesting at all times, is from the book and play by Richard Savage. Clara Young, as the beautiful Nihilist entering Russia, knowing that the entire secret force is trying to find her, gives a perfect interpretation. The American, Lennox, who obliges a handsome woman who has lost her passport, by allowing her to enter as his wife, little dreams who she is, and what complications will arise. arise. She becomes his official wife. Helene Marie is ready to leave, but finds this even more difficult, until she makes a young aristocrat believe she is in love with him, and they use his yacht. The police pursue them.

The entire play has most beautiful settings, with exciting situations throughout. The ball given to the Czar and Czarina is artistic, and launching of a torpedo and its explosion blowing up a yacht is something never before attempted in pictures.

The programme ends with a screaming comedy with that funny pair, Wedd and Darby. This bill will prevail for the remainder of the week.

Blanche Sweet, the favorite photoplay star, scores a great success in "The Second Mrs. Roebuck." a two-part Majestic society drama, which came to the Columbia yesterday. She is at her best in this sort of play, where she can display her good looks and winning personality, and she improves every opportunity in this production.

Margaret Edwards, pronounced the most perfect example of physical development in the world, and Fay Tincher, the favorite comedience, are to be seen in a breezy Komie company entitled "A Physical Culture Romance." Though Fay's beautiful sister steals all

WHITE SLAVE FILM AT STAR

Representatives of transportation companies and several prominent showmen of Portland were the guests of Robert C. Bruce and the Sunset thester yesterday morning at a private exhibition of a 4000-foot film entitled "When the Mountains Call," a scenic review of Portland, the Columbia River and the scaling of Mount Adams. Mr. Bruce, the editor-author of the attraction, is a resident of White Salmon, Wash. His ranch, "Top o' the World," is one of the beauty spots of the White Salmon country. The films depict the scenery of the Columbia River linking together an intensely interesting series of adventures of venturesome sport in the wilds.

A letter has been received by friends in Portland from William T. Carrington, a well-known New Yorker, who "got in bad."

The "movies" cured him.
Complications heaped themselves upon the tramp and the "nice man" in Paris to render what assistance he can and to watch the great struggle from and to watch the great struggle from close quarters. He is loud in his praises of the French, both of the military and shows the latest war news. of the French, both of the military and of the general people, of their prepara-tions for the care of the sick and

His letter, in part, is:

in Traffic in Souls," Thrilling Reel, Has Moral Lesson.

"The Traffic in Souls," one of the mest graphic white slave pictures yet produced for the screen, is being shown at the Star Theater.

The play deals essentially with one girl, showing how she was made to face a life of shame and how she finally held out until the police came to her rescue. An odd machine is used by the sister of the captured girl to her rescue. An odd machine is used by the sister of the captured girl to expose the methods of the "trust."

The play carries its lesson. Long, terms in prison are meted out to those actively engaged in the snaring of girls.

"Traffic in Souls" is a powerful picture, with a strong moral lesson. Interest is held tense from first to last, and many of the film situations are extremely thrilling. The girl in the case heattles like a Trojan to escape her foes, and her final triumph prompts spectators to applaud vehemently.
