VERDICT IN ARSON CASE 'NOT GUILTY

Charge Against Max Albert of Attempting to Defraud Insurance Firms Fails.

OTHER PROSECUTIONS DUE

First of Series Is Hard-Fought Trial and Bitterness Creeps Into Court Proceedings-Jury Out Four and a Half Hours.

"Not guilty," was the verdict returned by the jury in the case of Max Albert, charged with arson, whose trial was concluded in Judge Morrow's department of the Circuit Court resierday. After deliberating four and a half hours, the jurors amounced their decision at 10 o'clock last flight and were discharged.

cision at 19 o'clock last flight and were discharged.

The trial occupied over a week and was hard fought from start to finish. It was the first of a series of prosecutions of members of the alleged "arson trust." In which it was expected to show filegal activities of a group of Portland shopkeepers to defraud insurance companies. Indictments charging arson were returned by the August grand jury that involved nearly a dozen small merchants and one local attorney, David Pepp, who is charged with having courseled the setting of incendiary fires.

Charged jointly in the indictment with Max Albert were L. Sax and Sam Sax, his son, and Philip Davis. The last-named confessed to having joined in a conspiracy in fate July, 1912, to burn the Sax store, 201 First street, and it was alleged that Max Albert was secured by Davis to set the place after.

The defendants demanded separate trials, although the two Saxes will be tried together. This case probably will be called this week in Judge McGinn's department of Circuit Court, unless it is decided to bring Max Albert to trial again at once on the same charge or to face another indictment charging, him with having set fire to a bouse he occupied in Alberta in November, 1912. It is alleged he set the place ablaze in order to collect insurance on his household furnishings, which he had placed in a rented house.

Unfairness was charged against the prosecution to the end of the chapter by Attorney Malarkey, who referred to the state's conduct of the case in bitter words in his closing argument before the jury yesterday, Deputy District At-

"I have been aroused at times during the trial of this case by what I regard as the unfairness of the District Attorney in the prosecution of Max Albert. The District Attorney is like the police: when he goes after a mun he wants to land him. What we need is public defenders, just as much as we need public prosecutors, to affectuate the rights of a man on trial for his liberty.

Proof of Incendiarism Denied. In arguing the case for the defense Mr. Malarkey held it had not been proved that the Sax fire was incen-diary; he held rather to the theory that gas had escaped from a jet left open by mistake of a clerk. This theory, he held, was substantiated fully by the
