Dr. Bainbridge may be right and he may be wrong, but it seems to the lay mind that upon the whole it is better to keep on the safe side in such matters. Until we know definitely that cancer cannot be communicated by any surroundings is it not wright.

Great Britain appears to be within her rights, under a precedent established by the United States, in satisfying herself that contraband consigned to neutral ports is not actually destined for German ports and in seizing in August and September they were our surroundings, is it not wiser to act it if she finds it to be so. Dr. Bainbridge, of New York, has published a new book on "The Cancer Problem." He is one of those paysicians who think they benefit the public by minimizing the dangers of disease. Dr. Bainbridge announces that some of the increase in cancer cases which has been reported is due to more accurate statistics than we had in former times. He does not believe that the disease is hereditary nor that it can be communicated from one person to another. The environment has nothing to do with its prevalence and neither has food.

Now these are all undecided points. Dr. Bainbridge may be right and he great Britain appears to be within appears by worden were and early column of has nothing to do with its prevalence and neither has food.
