DESPERATE BREWERS USED NAMES WITHOUT SANCTION TO BOLSTER CAUSE OF WETS. From Portland Evening Telegram of Yesterday, October 22. The Committee of One Hundred makes the following report regarding the liquor men's answer to the dry challenge: The Union Meat Company repudiates the use of its name by liquor men as unauthorized. R. W. Montague declares he never signed the statement below which his name appears. The Pacific Paper Company denounces the use of their name as unauthorized. Ina F. Powers says he never signed any such statement as that offered by the Oregon Brewers' Association as bearing his signature. W. D. Wheelwright says he has signed nothing at all in the past two months, while the Committee of One Hundred's challenge was made nine days ago. Dr. A. C. Pantan says no one had any authority to use his name as a supporter of the brewers, and certainly not as taking up the Committee of One Hundred's challenge. W. B. Glazko says he does not remember ever signing any such statement of the kind. M. L. McGraw, president of the East Side Fuel Company, says he never signed his name. H. T. Clark, of the Portland Iron Works, says he never allowed his name to be used in connection with the Committee of One Hundred's challenge. Donald McKay says he signed no statement of any kind whatever. Many other business men say they signed the statement without reading it and do not subscribe to it. Other leading business men say that while they signed the statement, they do not care to allow their names to be used to back up the reply to the Committee of One Hundred's challenge. This is an epitome of the first series of interviews secured by the Committee of One Hundred in checking up on the reply to its challenge to the wet interests of Oregon to produce the names of 100 Oregonians, willing to sponsor the various statements and mis-statements that have been published in Oregon by the saloon interests. Less than half a dozen men were willing to admit that they subscribed to the unique "declaration of principle" in the liquor dealers' published advertisement, which all—with nearly $2,000 others—were asserted to have signed. As soon as the Committee of One Hundred began to check up the list, it met with indignant protests that names had been used by the liquor interests without authority. A large number of those whose names were used admitted frankly they were opposed to state-wide prohibition for various reasons. But as to endorsing the statements in the "declaration of principle," particularly those saying that 10,000 men would be thrown out of work if state-wide prohibition passes, that 500 stores would be made vacant and 1300 dwelling houses for rent, as a result of the dry amendment—that was quite another matter. The president of one leading business house was on his way East when he learned the name of his firm had been used. He immediately telegraphed his representatives to issue a full denial. Many of those whose names appear in the full-page advertisements say they were approached by "petition chasers" and signed the petition without knowing what they were signing. Not one man of those seen was willing to admit that he had signed the petition as an answer to the Committee of One Hundred's challenge. Not one man was willing to say that he would stand sponsor for any of the statements regarding the effect of prohibition in Kansas, in Maine and in dry towns in Oregon, the misquotation of Abraham Lincoln, of Theodore Roosevelt, of Woodrow Wilson and other noted persons, all of which was the essence of the Committee of One Hundred's challenge. It is impossible at this short notice to interview every name on the list. A statement issued by the committee this morning, "Interviewing such a list requires time, but it is being done as expeditiously as possible. All over Oregon people are demanding to know if these various merchants and business houses subscribed to the statements underneath their names and we shall try and report on what these people say from day to day."
