Continue to Fight.

AGUAS CALIENTES, Mexico, Oct 27.
(Delayed in transmission.)—A coalition of the delegates representing General Villa and General Zapata practically ruled today's session of the Mexican national convention after the stormlest and most exciting meeting the assembly had witnessed. For a time it threatened to break into a riot. The convention for several minutes was in confusion. The delegates reached for their revolvers, but finally yielded to the calming speeches of their colleagues.

Zapatistas Threaten War.

The outburst occurred shortly after the arrival of 26 representatives of General Zapata. It developed that they came not as authorized delegates, but to learn the views of the convention before telegraphing for credentials. They were assigned seats on the platform amid cheers and their leaders were invited to speak.

Paulilo Martinez described the ideals of the plan of Ayala, the platform of the Zapata movement, informing the convention in forcible terms that if it were not accepted by the convention

Metaphor Precipitates Riot.

Antonio Zoto y Gama, who spoke next for the Zapatistas, precipitated a climax which threatened to disrupt the convention. The first part of his speech, full of flowery phrases, was unanimously applauded, but one of his metaphors miscarried. He had compared the Mexican flag with a rag and was not permitted to finish his figure of spoech. Indignant and angry delegates rose to their feet with menacing gestures.

The Mexican flag on the platform was borne away by angry delegates from the place where the orator stood and the convention was in an uproar at once. Some of the delegates, with hands on their pistols, yelled at each other in a mad fury. Antonio Villatother in a mad fury. other in a mad fury. Antonio Villa-real, the chairman of the convention, pounded in vain for order. Out of the boxes and galleries crowds of spec-tators started in a panic for the doors, hoping to escape before the shooting

Lenders Stand by Flag.

General Obregon and General Hay and other prominent delegates, however, rushed to the platform, and standing by the flag, succeeded in obtaining order out of the chaos.

During the hostile demonstration, Antonio Zoto y Gama stood on the rostrum, indifferent to the epithets of the delegates on the floor. Finally, when quiet was restored, he reaumed his speech, explaining that if he had been permitted to finish his sentence it would have meant no affront to the Mexican flag. What he intended to say, he declared, was that the flag had become a rag which traitors to real liberty had used as an emblem to obtain power, and that the flag was ceming to stand for individualism rather than a purely national emblem.

Roque Gonzales Garza, of the Villa and deploring the incident. With dramatic fervor he announced that all Mexicans clamored for the plan of Ayaia. One of the delegates then asked if the other Generals of the Division of the North held the same view. Led by General Felipe Angeles, the Generals of the North rose to a man and signified their approval, where upon a standing vote recorded the great majority as favoring the plan of the Zapatistas.

the Zapatistas.

Another dramatic moment in the day's session came when Colonel Alfredo Serranos, of the Zapatistas commission, defending Gama's utterances, said the Zapatistas did not carry the Mexican flag when fighting against their brothers, but entered battle with courage in their hearts and rifles in their hands. As he stood there, coatless, wearing a brown shirt with a black handkerchief around his neck, in khaki trousers and leggings, he received the most enthusiastic ovation which the convention has accorded any previous speaker.

Zapatistas Take Formal Part.

When the other delegates had spoken telegrams were received from General Zapata authorizing some of his representatives at the convention formally to present their credentials at the convention as delegates. The report of the commission headed by General Obregon, which went to Mexico City to interview General Carranzo, will not be presented until after the convention passes tomorrow on the credentials of the Zapata delegates.

When the day's session adjourned the Zapata delegates were conversing in a friendly way with the remainder of the delegates. When the other delegates had spoken
