Nobody "dresses" any more, to speak of—we get up and go to bed early and lead a truly virtuous and patriarchal life. The grandest and most fastidious men and women rub shoulders anonymously in public-spirited cares for the poor, the sick and the wounded, and new traits of character develop where least expected. I met a man today, an excellent good fellow—"one of the best" you would call him—but who was usually looked upon as an exquisite who never needed to put himself to the slightest inconvenience.

He is now a "brancardier" on regular duty for so many hours a day and night. "I have just come from the Ritz," he said, "and, with another chap, had to carry a heavy artilleryman upstairs on a stretcher. His head was swollen to twice its size and black. It was like carrying a dead horse. I am no good at dressing, so all I can do is stretcher work and sweeping out the rooms. It is all well for the other fellows to laugh at me, but somebody must do these jobs."

Reader, imagine yourself in a railroad carriage, travelling over the 120 miles or so that separate Ghent from Ostend. In the train with you are some 200 or 200 women and children, with a scattering of old men. There is a mother, holding her baby to her breast and staring with wide even shead of her staring with wide even shead of her holding her baby to her breast and staring with wide eyes ahead of her. She is thinking of the child of 7, who was ill of scarlet fever when the soldiers came to their little town, and who died of fright at the sight. So quick was the flight that the little body had to be left unburied in the cottage.

But it is not there now, for the cottage and the village are alike in ashes.

NERVOUS CHILDREN

Children are nervous because they inherit a tendency to nervousness, because they overstudy or overwork, or because they are run down physically. Whatever the cause, nervous children need careful management. Scolding does no good and most forms of punishment are harmful. See that the patient does not overwork or over-study, give good nourishing food, suffi-cient out-of-door exercise and a safe, non-alcoholic tonic.
