It was Billy Pig's birthday, and his mother told him he could have a party, so he invited all the animals from neighboring farms to come.

Billy Pig was at the table first, and before anyone could taste a thing he said: "I hope you will be careful not to eat too much for you can be made terribly sick eating ice cream and cake and pies and candy all at one time."

"You better not," said a pig from the other side of the table. "I should think you would have better manners, Billy Goat."

"If you knew good manners you would not put in me so deep into that ice cream you are eating," replied Billy Goat.

"If you do not like the way I am eating, you can look another way," replied Billy Pig.

"All right," said Billy Goat. "Go back to your seat in the back, and I will take care of the rest."

THE SANDMAN STORY FOR TONIGHT By Mrs. F. A. Walker

Copyright, 1914, by the McClure Newspaper Syndicate, New York.

Billy Pig Gives a Party. It was Billy Pig's birthday, and his mother told him he could have a party, so he invited all the animals from neighboring farms to come.

"I wish you had some tin can salad," said Billy Goat, helping himself to a piece of cake; "now a tin can salad is so much longer, I can eat all there is on this table in a few minutes."

"You better not," said a pig from the other side of the table. "I should think you would have better manners, Billy Goat."

"If you knew good manners you would not put in me so deep into that ice cream you are eating," replied Billy Goat.

"If you do not like the way I am eating, you can look another way," replied Billy Pig.

"All right," said Billy Goat. "Go back to your seat in the back, and I will take care of the rest."

Billy Pig did as Billy Goat told him, and old Black Rooster bristled up and jumped to the ground.

"What do you mean by pushing me that way?" he asked, looking at Red Rooster.

Down flew Red Rooster and jumped at Black Rooster. Just then Billy Goat bumped the pig next to him and off he rolled onto the ground. He hit the dog, and the dog hit the goat next
