be features. A large attendance is urged.

Unheard Voices.
SHE was an old maid, a genuine old maid, not the vital, alert bachelorette who has so rapidly displaced the old maid that she has now become almost a species extinct.

But this one, perhaps because she lived in an out-of-the-way corner of the world, survived.

She had kittenish little ways, quite out of keeping with her gray hair and wrinkled face. She didn't believe in a woman's earning her living or voting or doing any of the things women are doing today. She thought women ought to be sheltered, protected. She took no interest in the things the world is interested in. She did not read the newspapers or magazines or books. As a consequence, her life was narrow, her circle of friends small; for nowadays people haven't much time for the one so limited in outlook. Consequently, she was lonely.

She paid a visit to a large city and because she was interested in few things, she spent most of her time wandering around in the shops, it being part of her creed that to be truly feminine and womanly, one must show an interest in clothes. In going from the dressgoods to the lace section, she passed through the book department. And—a thing unusual for her to do—she paused and listlessly turned the pages of some of the books lying on the tables.

And while she did this, she heard a voice—or so she tells. The voice said: "I've had a tremendously interesting life. As a girl, I was a great beauty. But I didn't know what beauty was for or what it meant."

The old maid red, for she had been a beauty with red bronze hair and wonderful blue eyes and good features. She hadn't understood what beauty meant either.

"Because I was a beauty," went on the voice, "I was conceited, selfish. I thought I had the world at my feet, to do with as I pleased. I married young, quarreled with my husband, left him and made my own way in the world. I had a gay life and lots of friends, but it wasn't satisfying. Then after my husband's death, a true love came and I began to know what life really meant. Oh, I had a vivid, colorful life, a life that might help other women to know many things, a life which in the mere reading of it will put color and interest into yours."

The voice ceased. The old maid looked about her. Everything in the book department was going on as usual. Customers were chatting and buying, salespeople making out slips or hurrying about getting books.

She looked at the shelves and tables loaded with volumes. "Every book," she thought, "probably has something just as interesting to tell me."

From that day, she became a reader. She experienced, through the written page what she did not have the opportunity to experience through her own life.

She became a different woman, a wide-awake, interesting woman. Life has broadened its horizons for her. She may not have some of the things that herself a bachelor girl, a woman who has become one with all the big movements of the world.

Why not listen to these hitherto unheard voices and wake to some new meaning of life?

Plant City, Fla.—"I wish I could tell everybody about Vinol. For nine years I was in bad health. I got so I could not sleep, and I could not stand it to have my children come near me. I could not even sew or do any heavy housework. I was simply tired all the time. I tried so many medicines I could not recall them all, but nothing did me any good. One day a friend asked me to try Vinol and said it was the best tonic she ever saw. I did so, and soon got the first good night's sleep I had had for a long time. Now I sleep well, my appetite is good, my nervousness is all gone and I am so strong and well I do all my housework and work in my flower garden without feeling tired or nervous. Vinol has made me a well and happy woman."

THE SANDMAN STORY FOR TONIGHT BY MRS. F. A. WALKER

Drusilla Misses Bobby Jones.
"I WONDER where Bobby Jones is?" said Drusilla one night. "It has been two nights since I have talked to him."

"I have wondered where he could be, too," said Teddy Bear, from his corner. "I miss hearing you and Bobby tell about the adventures you have had."

Drusilla raised her head and looked toward Bobby's box.

"I can see his box," she said; "he never stayed away as long as this before; in fact, I cannot remember that he ever skipped a night when I have been in bed."

Teddy Bear turned his head and looked where Bobby's box stood. "Goodness me," he exclaimed. "Drusilla, you can see only the bottom of Bobby's box." "I can see his box," she said; "he never stayed away as long as this before; in fact, I cannot remember that he ever skipped a night when I have been in bed."

Teddy Bear turned his head and looked where Bobby's box stood. "Goodness me," he exclaimed. "Drusilla, you can see only the bottom of Bobby's box." "I can see his box," she said; "he never stayed away as long as this before; in fact, I cannot remember that he ever skipped a night when I have been in bed."

"You need no one but me and my army to rescue Bobby Jones," said the captain. "Pray do not be in the least alarmed for your friend's safety. We will rescue him, and off marched the wooden soldiers to Bobby Jones' box. Drusilla and Teddy Bear watched with anxious eyes.

"Lay down your guns and form a line at the door of the box," directed the captain. "I hope there will be no need to use violence in the rescue of our friend. But they heaped up on this tremendous object that makes a prisoner of your friend. Now, altogether, push."

Off went the book from Bobby Jones' box, and up popped Bobby, with a spring that made the box almost turn over.

Over went the little wooden soldiers on the floor, partly from fright from the manner Bobby popped up out of his box and partly from the exertion of his arms. But they heaped up and stood on their feet before the astonished Bobby could make out what had freed him.

"We are your deliverers," said the captain, in answer to Bobby's question as to what had happened.

"You can thank me for your escape Bobby Jones," said Drusilla; "I was the one who sounded the alarm."

FASHION NOTES

SUCH attractive skating apparel as the shops are showing! The windows are full of them and the counters are crowded with them.

One of the local shops has a particularly attractive lot of sweaters, scarfs and caps, to say nothing of skirts, muffs and boots.

The sweaters are comfortable looking ones in wool, silk and eiderdown. Many have the background in silk of one color and the outside stripes of wool of a contrasting color. The caps are saucy things with small "ears" on them. They are fastened snugly to the cap with buttons. The scarfs are long and of the same color and variety as the cap and sweater.

The muffs are knitted and correspond to the caps and sweaters in color.

The boots are high topped, laced and have the appearance of a hiking shoe.

The skating skirt is short with a flare at the bottom, giving room for freedom of action. The heavy hem serves to hold the skirt down. The material is of a sturdy tweed and most of them are in dark serviceable colors.

In spite of the newness of skating to the local shops are quoting attractive prices.

How You Can Remove Every Trace of Hair

Toilet Talks.

A stiff paste made with some powdered delatone and water and spread on a hairy surface about two minutes will, when removed, take every trace of hair with it. The skin should then be washed to free it from the remaining delatone. No harm can result from this treatment, but be sure it is delatone you get and you will not be disappointed.—Adv.

Dainty, hidden flavors brought out by frying with CRISCO

The dainty flavors of the food itself predominate, because Crisco does not possess the strong, greasy taste of lard or oil. Hidden flavors come forth, dainty shadings of taste that you had no idea were there.

Croquettes, like all foods fried in Crisco have their own true flavor. That "lardy" taste is absent.

Crisco digests with ease. It is a food fat. The "Crisco Process" has made this possible. It delivers the cream; that is, the richest, most digestible solids from vegetable food oils. Think of the cream from milk or the sugar from cane or beets. Then think of the Crisco cream from vegetable oils. Only the "Crisco Process" can deliver Crisco, the new cooking fat.

Have your grocer send you Crisco today. Try it first for frying, then for shortening and cake making.

DR. T. FELIX GOURAUD'S ORIENTAL CREAM OR MAGICAL BEAUTIFIER
