"Ready Money." Featuring Great Actor, Is at Star.

CHEERS WON AT MAJESTIC

"Man From Mexico" Is Laughable Attraction at Peoples, "Shore Acres" 'at Columbia, Sunset and National Charm.

Edward Abeles, noted Edward Abeles, noted American comedian, came to the Star Theater yesterday, in "Ready Money," a Paramount picture. The picturization, from the play by James Montgomery, is in five acts of more than 320 scenes, marked by rapid action and good acting on the part of an especially fine cast. The cast includes such celebrities as Bessie Barriscale and Theodore Roberts, as well as the star.

ritles as Bessie Barriscale and Theo-dore Roberts, as well as the star. The story of "Ready Money" hinges on the exciting life of Stephen Baird, a young mining engineer, who goes West to seek his fortune in the gold fields. Edward Abeles, as Stephen, has a series of most startling adventures. From the first flash of action on the screen to the scene which marks the end the film teems with excite-

"413" at Majestic Is Startling Story of Thrill Type.

Seldom is a picture ever followed by cheering in these days of over-critical photoplay patrons. The train-wreck scene received a tribute to its realism yesterday when the theater rang with the cheers of the audience. The fea-ture "418" is a Vitagraph production, with beautiful Anita Stewart, sup-ported by an all-star cast. It is a story fairly sizzling with excitement. A diamond smuggler and his accom-plices are the chief factors. The story of how the girl, unconscious of her own father's guilt, aids the detective in catching the guilty ones makes the plot one of the best the Majestic has ever shown.

bia With Realism. The most vivid storm ever depicted on a screen is one of the thrilling spectacles in "Shore Acres," the popular old New England classic of James A. Hearne, which came to the Columbia Theater yesterday. It is in five acts and every one of them teems with heart throbs and incidents which are true to life.

The storm scene was taken in flerce gale on the rugged New England seashore. The duel between the brothers in the lighthouse, caused by the de Clssy Fitz-Gerald, one of the funniest of funny women, is at the National Theater this week in "The Win(k) some Widow." The widow started her career by being pulled from an incoming vessel before she was ready to go ashore, piled into a motorboat and whirled away to rehearsal before she had time to get her breath. Her career from that moment became one of furious pace. Everybody went one of furious pace. Everybody went crazy over her wink. She was en-gaged to four men at one time, and then friend-husband, with a long then friend-husband, with a long mustache and a big gun, appeared upon the scene. The play is a scream from the beginning to the end.

SOCKS KNITTED IN PLAY FOR BRITISH AT FRONT

Florence Born, Who Is Gertrude in "Milestones," Has Aim in Unraveling Yarn on Stage-Relatives of Actresses With Allies.

AYBE you noticed the long, gray poke of knitting pierced through with bright needles which Gerrude Rhead carries about with her in the second act of "Milestones"? A long, gray, sorrowful-looking poke it is, as colorless and luster-lacking as Gertrude's gray yarn she weaves into a monotonous inch or so every night while she weaves also the story of Gertrudes' forforn and drab life. Well, whether or not you noted the interminable knitting, it may interest you to know that it is in the process making of a sock. When it is all finished it will be added unto its long gray mate, and put into the box of warm knitted things which the women of the "Milestones" company are knitting for the English soldiers.

Florence Born is Gertrude of the the second act of "Milestones"? A long, Florence Born is Gertrude of the play, and, naturally, she is a sock or so and a grand fat muffler ahead of the other women. You see all the other women characters in the play, marry and can quarrel with their husbands and argue about their children's mar-riages and a lot of other attractive family affairs, but poor Gertrude has to express her soul best in her sit by the-fire expression and her knitting.

All of us, who have seen the play, quite adore Gertrude. By far it is the big, fine role among several, and secretly I rejoice, that she didn't marry Sam. 'Twere better to have loved and lost than be wedded to a Samuel Sibley. We talked it over at considerable length yesterday, Miss Born and I. She is a big, wholesome English girl, and the rare skin of the Devonshire lass. She has gone right into the heart of Gertrude and knows all her mental adjustments. She says she can almost feel her soul take on years and weariness as Gertrude makes her transition from rose-colored youth to transition from rose-colored youth to middle-aged sobriety and on into colorless old age. Whether her soul does those things I cannot tell, but I do know that Miss Born's voice and body and her face make the changes. Time writes quick and fast in her dressing-room. Miss Born is an artist in make-up or she never could paint hollows and pinched spots and sunken lines as she does into her fair, youthful face She says that at first she got ful face. She says that at first she got so in the habit of pursing her lips and assuming the alert, clasped-hand atti-tude that she found herself carrying it into her private life. So she quit it.

American Husband Wanted. She says she doesn't intend to emu-late any of Gertrude's noble sacrifices to ideals, because she intends to marry an American and Americans don't let heir women make fools of themselves. Fools of the husband maybe, but never
