

ELECTION HAS ITS LITTLE SURPRISES

Republicans and Democrats Both Win Where They Themselves Expected to Lose.

OHIO UPSET IS STRIKING

"Dry" Candidate Elected, Although State Goes Overwhelmingly 'Wet.' Wadsworth, Curtis, Phelan Also Reverse Form.

OREGONIAN NEWS BUREAU, Washington, Nov. 11.—Looking back over the returns of the recent elections, politicians of both parties find results that are difficult to explain and the surprises were on both sides. The four big surprises of the election were found in New York, Ohio, Kansas and California.

Few politicians believed that Wadsworth could be elected Senator in New York; Wadsworth himself expected to be defeated by 40,000; the election of Willis as Governor of Ohio was believed by Republicans to be beyond hope, and not the most sanguine Democrat in the country dared look for the election of Phelan as Senator in California.

Wadsworth's Victory Explained.
The election of Wadsworth is explained by the disintegration of the Progressive party in New York; by the direct effects of the Underwood tariff on New York State industries and by the Whitman landslide. There is no such explanation, however, for the election of Governor Willis in Ohio. Willis was a "dry" candidate, and so explained his position in every speech he made in the state. Governor Cox, his Democratic opponent was an avowed "wet" man, and Ohio went overwhelmingly "wet."

Yet the "wet" candidate for Governor was defeated and the "dry" candidate elected in the face of the vote on the prohibition amendment. It was this issue which the Democrats most expected to aid in the election of Cox.

Phelan's Election Wholly Unexpected.
Throughout the campaign the Democrats conceded the election of Knowland as Senator in California. In face of the registration they conceded there was no hope of electing Phelan, and at no time did the Democratic committee list California as even "doubtful" on the Senatorship.

The election of Phelan occasioned no more surprise in the Democratic camp than did the defeat of George A. Neeley, the Democratic candidate for Senator in Kansas. Neeley was thought by his party to be safe, and the Republicans at no time laid claim to Kansas, fearing that ex-Senator Curtis would be defeated because he is an avowed standpatter of the extreme type. Moreover, it was thought by Democrats and feared by Republicans that Victor Murdock, the Progressive candidate, would poll such a large vote as to insure the defeat of Curtis.

New Jersey Also Surprises.
There were other strange results. New Jersey, the President's home state, completely repudiated its favorite son, and elected a Republican Representative in the President's home district. Eight of the 12 members from New Jersey will be Republicans; in the present House New Jersey has only two Republicans; the other 10 are Democrats. Moreover, the Republicans wrested control of both branches of the State Legislature from the Democrats.

The voters in different states seem to have different standards by which to judge their Representatives in Congress. Representative Lafferty, of Oregon, and Representative Hoxworth, of Illinois, were defeated largely because of their inattention to business and their absenteeism; on the other hand Representative Barton, of Nebraska, notoriously the most regular attendant upon the sessions of the House, was defeated.

There was one man running for the House this Fall whose election was conceded, Clyde Kelly, of Pennsylvania, who was nominated by seven different parties—endorsed, in fact, by all parties but the Republicans. Yet Kelly was defeated by a Republican whose chances were thought to be nil.

Socialist Defeats Warhorse.
Representative Goldfogle, of New York, has been a socialist warhorse for some time, though not a National figure by any means. Up to a short time before election his return to Congress was conceded, but he was defeated by the only socialist to break into the new House. On the other hand, Victor Berger and Winfield Gaylord, of Milwaukee, were thought to have good prospects for election by the Socialists of their respective districts and both were defeated by Republicans.

Michigan returned two surprises in the House by re-electing Representatives Doremus and Beakes, Democrats. Both districts are normally Republican and the rest of the Michigan delegation will be Republican, the Progressives having been defeated. Doremus and Beakes owe their return to the large vote polled by the defeated Progressive candidate in their districts.

ROAD TO SPEND $140,000

O-W, R & N, PROPOSES TO ERECT ROUNDHOUSE AT THE DALLIES.

Umattila Facilities Probably Will Be Moved to Coyote When Echo Cut-off Is Completed.

A new roundhouse and improved freight terminal facilities, requiring an aggregate expenditure of approximately $140,000 will be built by the O-W, R & N. Company early next year at The Dalles.

J. D. Farrell president of the company, and J. P. O'Brien, vice-president and general manager, visited The Dalles yesterday and concluded negotiations for the improvements. The work will be started probably soon after the first of the year.

This decision means that the O-W, R & N. Company's freight terminal will remain at The Dalles indefinitely. The company some time ago considered the advisability of removing them to Sherman Junction, about 20 miles east. Plans for the work at The Dalles have been completed by the company's engineers in Portland. They call for a modern fireproof roundhouse with stalls to accommodate about 30 engines. A complete new layout of switching tracks and facilities for assembling cars and making up freight trains also will be provided. Property for this purpose already has been acquired adjacent to the present trackage.

The Dalles will remain a division point indefinitely, but the Umattila facilities probably will be moved to a point near Coyote as soon as the Coyote-Echo cut-off is completed.
