

GUILT ON MINOR CHARGE ADMITTED

Court Withholds Sentence on Joseph Berger and Revokes Parole of Egbert Roach.

PROSECUTOR NOT PLEASSED

Judge McGinn Is Not Enthusiastic About Attending Meeting of Women Today, Called to Censure Moral Cases' Conduct.

Accepting a plea of guilty from Joseph Berger on an entirely new indictment returned by the grand jury yesterday, Judge McGinn took his case under advisement and said he would give his decision later. He revoked the parole granted some time ago to Egbert Roach and will announce the disposition of his case at the same time he passes sentence on Berger.

Both are charged with having contributed to the delinquency of a minor, a 14-year-old girl, who attracted much attention in the trial of the recent baseball players' cases, being the chief witness against both. The indictment to which Berger pleaded guilty charges that he gave her intoxicating liquor. Another indictment charges delinquency and a third charges him of a statutory crime. It was agreed yesterday that the other two charges would be dismissed.

"When we get over being hysterical and get down to normal again," said Judge McGinn, "I will pass judgment in these cases. I don't know when that will be. The discussion that has followed the trials of other cases in this series has not left us in the calm and judicial mood that should prevail in deciding a case of this kind."

Court Reserves Judgment.
"I will think about these cases. I have thought quite a good deal about them already, but I want to arrive at a more satisfactory solution of the matter in my own mind than I have been able to reach so far. I will dispose of these matters at some time when I get around to it; for the present I will reserve judgment."

Berger was represented by Attorney Logan, who said his client would plead guilty to having taken the girl to dinner at the New Republic Grill and in the course of the meal he bought beer, which they both drank.

The case of Roach was called and the young actor was accompanied in court by his father, mother and sister, who came from their home in Kansas City to be of assistance to him.

"I withdrew Roach's parole," said Judge McGinn, "because I believed all should be on the same footing. I understand he made statements to the District Attorney's office before I ever saw him, with the understanding that he was to be paroled. I will decide this case at the same time that I do the other."

Attorney Orton appeared for Roach and called attention to the fact that his family had come from the East and were anxious to return and take the son with them. A plea was made that Roach be allowed to go home.

Parents Advised to Return.
"They may as well return without him," said the Judge. "Their presence or absence here can make no difference in his case."

Chief Deputy District Attorney Collier, who handled the series of cases against the two and the bailpayers already tried, said yesterday that a plea of guilty on a lesser charge was accepted from Berger because of the fact that conviction would not hold if obtained in a courtroom closed against the public.

An indignation meeting to protest against Judge McGinn's action in excluding the public from this series of trials will be held this afternoon by women at the Central Library, at which Mrs. Josephine H. Sharp will preside, but the gathering is not likely to develop any sensational features, inasmuch as it seems highly improbable that either Judge McGinn or Deputy District Attorney Collier will speak, although both have been invited.

Mr. Collier feels that if he were to speak, being opposed to Judge McGinn's ruling, the action would lack the element of fairness unless Judge McGinn himself were to attend and also explain his position. Mr. Collier said that if Judge McGinn attends he will appear.

Answer Given in Verse.
Judge McGinn did not seem enthusiastic at the prospect of attending the meeting and probably will conclude that his duty is to transact the business that comes before him today in his department of Circuit Court. He said he had been invited to attend, but when asked if he would do so said he would make the same answer he already had made to others. He then quoted from Julius Caesar, where Brutus says:

O, that a man might know
The end of this day's business ere it come!
But it outgoeth that the day will end;
And then the end is known.

Speculation is keen among those who have followed the case as to what sentence will be imposed on Berger. The maximum that the court might inflict would be a fine of $1000 and imprisonment for six months. Judge McGinn expressed yesterday considerable concern for the future of the girl and from his remarks it was inferred that he will not be content with punishing Berger without interesting himself in helping, if possible, to give the girl an opportunity to recover her mistakes and get a new start in life.

MARKET LAW IS DESIRED
Ordinance Drafted to Provide Suspension of Rule Violators.

Power of the city to suspend farmers from the public market for violation of rules and regulations of the market is provided in an ordinance which City Commissioner Biglow is preparing for presentation to the Council next week. At present market officials exclude persons who violate the rules but it has been found that the plan is difficult with no ordinance to back up the officials. The new measure will give the right to the city to suspend a farmer from market for one or any length of time up to one year.
