

Society News By Gertrude P. Corbett

THE captivating social event of the week was the tea at which Mrs. Joseph Nathan Teal presided yesterday when Miss Genevieve Thompson was the honored guest. Hundreds of fashionably-gowned maids and matrons called during the hours to greet Miss Thompson. Reception halls and living-rooms were adorned with chrysanthemums and the beauty of the dining-room was enhanced by an artistic arrangement of roses.

Winter Care Of The Garden

Tulip Bulbs. Tulip bulbs that are expected to brighten the lawn in the early Spring should be planted in the Fall. They can be planted almost anytime during the good Fall and Winter weather, but the sooner they are planted after the stocks are ready at the seed stores, the better results you will secure. Other "Holland bulbs," such as the hyacinth and narcissus, crocus, etc., should be planted at the same time as the tulip.

The Darwin and late cottage tulips are best appropriately planted among shrubbery where they may be unharmed or where they may remain permanently. The regular early flowering varieties should be planted in formal beds, in borders on the lawn or for porch and window boxes.

One Kind of Housekeeper. HER house shines. The sense of its immaculateness seems to pervade the atmosphere about it. You feel it when you draw near. There isn't a speck of wild grass in the lawn. A dandelion wouldn't dare lift its sunny head. There isn't a dead blossom or a dried leaf among the flowers.

so that an edge shall not stray out of place. It seems to be a wonderfully kept house.

But if you are there any length of time you find you cannot walk on the grass, and that you must not pick the flowers. And in the house you hear: "Harry, don't scare that davenport, Tom, stop kicking that chair rung. Now, Susie, you know I don't allow you to move those cushions. Mercy on me, Louise! Don't pull those lace curtains back. I don't want the neighbors to see what I am doing. Per goodness takes the pins out of the lace curtains!"

And when she departs, as she does occasionally, for marketing or a club-meeting or a lecture on "The Improvement of the Heathen," a sigh of relief goes up from the assembled household. Harry stretches himself out on the accursed davenport. Susie proceeds to fix all over the cushions. Louise viciously takes the pins out of the lace curtains and tosses the curtains back as far as she can. And Mary lets the shades roll with a loud bang to the top of the window.

And if, before her return, they do not get the things all properly fixed again, she scolds them all roundly and wonders what sort of house they would have if she didn't look after it; and she loudly complains that nobody appreciates what she does not how hard she works.

And she is very sincere in her belief that she is a good housekeeper; that if it wasn't for her they would not have a comfortable home, and her feelings are genuinely hurt when she does not seem to appreciate what she does for the house.

Don't you know housekeepers like her? She is not a solitary example. And isn't the friction in the house-for there always is friction in such a home-because she has such a viewpoint and that one her own? She has her own idea of what constitutes good housekeeping, of what a home should be like. To her these ideas are as unalterable as the laws of physics, and she has a right to them.

Good Things in Markets

APPLES are coming to market in more or less neatly arranged boxes and are selling steadily; not at a fancy price certainly, but they are going off.
