The next morning the princess was up bright and early, and in a corner of the garden, hidden by trees, she planted the sprig of green the pigeon had dropped...

She touched it with the tip of her finger, the bud flew open and a dainty fairy flew out, waving her wings and glistened as the sunlight fell upon them.

"Weep no more," she told the princess, "your troubles are at an end, if you follow my directions."

"Your father is deceived by the queen as well as yourself, and you can save him if you watch the bush and water it each day. When you are in trouble or wish for anything, come here and repeat these lines:

"Hold your apron, said the fairy, touching a limb of the tree with her wand."

"The princess held her apron and a large apple fell into it."

"Cut the apple," said the fairy, "and take out the seeds and put them into a tiny silk bag that you will find when you open the apple and keep them until you find use for them; give your father the apple to eat and he will be well."

"The princess thanked the fairy and hurried to her father. When the apple was opened everything was just as the queen had said, and her daughter was as well as she was when she was last bit of the apple."

"The princess then led him to the room where the queen and her daughters were feasting with their friends."

"You wicked woman!" said the king; "have the castle and take your daughters with you."

"As the queen and her daughters were going out of the castle the fairy appeared to the princess. "Give each daughter a seed and the king to the queen."

"The princess did as the fairy told her, but the queen threw the bag back to her, and the daughters did the same."

WOMEN'S CLUBS

THE SANDMAN STORY FOR TONIGHT

By Mrs. F. A. Walker

ONCE upon a time there was a king who had an only daughter, and his wife was dead, he looked around to find a good woman to care for the little princess and guide her in the right way to become a good woman.

"The little princess became so fond of her new governess that she began to wish she were her mother, and one day she said, 'Oh that you had been my mother, dear governess! I have never known a mother's care, but I am sure a mother could not have been kinder to me than you have been, and I know could not love her better than I do you.'"

"Then the governess was struck with the idea of becoming queen. 'My dear princess,' she said, 'if you indeed love me so much, I will consent to you that it would give me the greatest joy to possess such a daughter as you are. I will give you a magic wand, and your father will deny you nothing. Go to him and ask him to make me his wife.'"

"The little princess hastened to her father and did as the governess had told her. At first the king did not talk her request as serious, but when he found the princess very unhappy because she did not have a mother, he made the governess his wife."

"For a while the queen was all kindness to the little princess, and the king felt he had done right in doing as his daughter asked."

"One day, however, the queen went out alone for a walk, and when she returned she had with her five girls, whom she presented to the king as her daughters. She had not told the king she was a widow, but had kept the names of her five daughters, and thought only of the queen."

"The poor little princess was put in the servants' quarters of the castle and her beautiful rooms given to the use of the daughters of the queen."

"One night while the little princess was crying herself to sleep she heard a tapping on the window, and when she opened it a pigeon flew out, saying, 'Plant that in the garden where no one will see it.'"

"The next morning the princess was up bright and early, and in a corner of the garden, hidden by trees, she planted the sprig of green the pigeon had dropped in place of a seed."

"She touched it with the tip of her finger, the bud flew open and a dainty fairy flew out, waving her wings and glistened as the sunlight fell upon them."

"Weep no more," she told the princess, "your troubles are at an end, if you follow my directions."

Wool Is Scarce

Foreign wars, army demands, and interrupted commerce have curtailed the wool supply.

Lower prices on wools and woolen goods are not likely for some time to come.

It is a good time to stock up, especially on blankets and things needed for cold weather comforts.

The stores are showing ample stocks, and prices on manufactured products have not yet been advanced, except in remote instances.

Our advertising columns will guide you to the stores where the goods you need will be found.

"Buy wools now," is a most timely suggestion.

with the seeds, but no sooner had they done so than their feet touched the ground and the mother became a rock and the five daughters five small stones beside it."

Parent Teacher Associations

Mrs. Alva Lee Stephens, who had charge of the excursions of the children from the various parent-teacher circles to the Mt. Hood Christmas tree, said in speaking of the undertaking: "The women from all the circles worked remarkably well and were most unselfish and painstaking. They chaperoned hundreds of little folk to that tree and did it all most systematically. The Parent-Teacher Association of Portland is certainly a splendid organization."

Of interest to many of the local women is the recent action taken by the Indiana branch of the National Congress of Mothers and Parent-Teacher Associations, who have decided to eliminate elaborate gowns and costumes at their state and district gatherings. Of this plan an authority on parent-teacher affairs says that: "Too often the large conventions of clubwomen have become nothing more than a fashion show, and also who has the means to take the best-filled trunk is the one that makes the most successful delegate. It has been, in fact, a matter of 'clothes first-club business afterward,' and the woman who could not attend the convention has been in place all the while every meeting, and all the latest frills and furbelows, found herself decidedly 'out of it.'"
