Columbia's Offering Starring Beatging Michelena Charms Audiences, Beatriz Michelena, the beautiful an Italented California actress, came to the Columbia Theater yesterday as the star in a five-act photoplay production of "Mrs. Wiggs of the Cabbage Patch" and surprised her most ardent admirers with her performance in this good, old-fashioned melodrama. Her portrayal of Lovey Mary, a homeless girl who turns out to be an heiress is excellent.

Blanche Chapman, who starred in the original production, makes just as motherly and lovable Mrs. Wiggs as ever. House Peters and Andrew Robson are seen sin their old roles.

The offering is of the kind that satisfies. The heart interest features of the original stories and stage production are retained, there is plenty of good comedy furnished by the "widow." her bridegroom and the neighbors, and the melodramatic situations are tense, especially where Lovey Mary is captured by her enemies who plot her death.

 BY LEONE CASS BAER,

If there are two professions in the world that hold pleasant antipathy and perfect understanding and appreciation of each other's prowess and shortcomings it's the merry little burglar and the merry little burgiar and the merry little limb of the law. Playwrights recognize this and have made dozens of plays out of it or have used bits of it to put in plays something else in "Officer 666," at the Baker this week, Augustin MacHugh has made an entire play with a set of policemen and one ione burgiar as his main characters. To offset any lack of balance in having so many policemen chasing the one lone burgiar through three acts the author has given the burgiing one qualities that make him a likable, artistic, well-bred and always interesting thief. His specialty and only line is stealing fine paintings. His passion for other peoples' pictures leads him into the home of Travers Gladwin, who is supposed to be traveling abroad. It so happens, however, that Gladwin has returned, and it is his catraest endeavor to catch the nice thief that makes the play so hilariously funny.

The burgiar is a nervy "boy," who neatly diverts suspicion from himself by assuming Gladwin's name and position, and when exposure threatens it is the real Gladwin who is under a the merry little limb of the law. Play-tion, and when exposure threatens it is the real Gladwin who is under a cloud. To make matters make the state of Salem, were at the Imperial yesterday.

Mr. and Mrs. W. I. is the real Gladwin who is under a cloud. To make matters more complicated a perfectly adorable girl has become engaged in a half-hearted way to the burglar, whom she believes to be Gladwin, and it is the genuine Gladwin who rescues her from an embarrassing situation.

Gladwin induces Officer 666 to exchange clothes with him, and in his new role catches the burglar. But what happens to the ununiformed real policeman makes a whole comedy in itself.
