fully beaten-or cheated-me out of four shillings playing "rummy," we ard riotous singing in the street behind the inn. Thompson put on his hat, threw his still camera over his shoulder, grabbed his cane and mo-tioned to me to follow. "Let's get into it, whatever it is,"

he said.

They were Dutch soldiers who had been spending the night in the cafes. They came up the little, narrow street, six abreast, singing joyously. The clatter of wooden shoes sounded on relater of wooden shoes sounded on the cobblesione pavement as the street spectators got out of the way. "Gardes civique," laughed Thompson with a flourish of his cane and a sort of grandiloquent attitude.

The gardes civique of Belgium have been treated with contempt by the Germans in this war. They were notified in advance that they would not be rated as soldiers of the enemy, but as civilians, and if caught firing on the Germans they would be considered as civilians attacking invaders, which meant that they would be shot down in cold blood and would not be accorded the rights of captured soldiers. The gardes civique organization corcovded the rights of captured soldiers.

The gardes civique organization corresponds to our state militia. Many of these volunteer organizations gave a splendid account of themselves, however, in the retreat from Brussels to Alost. Some, too, lived up to Napo-Alost. Some, too, lived up to Napo-leon's estimate, it is reported.

"Bour's Thoughts Are Told."

Every soldier not in German uniform was a garde civique to the Kansas photographet. Then he told me the old Napoleon story he heard the German officers tell after the fall of Aniwerp.

"Ever hear what the big French guy said about the gardes civique? Well, you know, Napoleon dishrt think they amounted to much, and one day just before one of his scraps he called his generals around him. There was a lot of tough-looking murderers stretched out along the enemy's lines. What's that bunch over there? said his nibs. That's the Prussians, one general said. Never mind, said old Nap, And what's that bunch over the hill there? said the big chief. Why, that's the English, said another general. No matter, said Bony, not important. And what's that long blue line coming over the hill? he said in alarm. That's the gardes civique, said another general. No matter, said another general and.
