AGGIE JOB OFFERED TO NICK WILLIAMS

Ex-Northwestern Leaguer Is Asked by Dr. Stewart to Be Baseball Coach.

ANSWER DUE IN TEN DAYS

Former Manager of Portland Colts Qualified to Be Hummer as College Mentor-Dr. H. Thielman Is Second Choice.

Nick is one of the cleanest, most popular fellows that ever wore a ball suit, and the Aggles may well consider themselves fortunate if he decides to follow in the footsteps of that royal line of coaching ancestry numbering such headliners as Fielder Jones, "Mysterious" Mitchell, Jess Garrett and Willia Clark.

Nick Williams has seen all sides of baseball, and, with his personality and adaptability, ought to be a hummer as a coach. Originally Nick started out with California as a nicher. He signed with California as a pitcher. He signed with San Francisco in 1902, pitched the next year for Columbus in the American Association, shied from there to Minneapolis, westward to Seattle in 1904, and wound up back at San Francisco in 1905.

Oregon's team has figured in only the two games against Washington. Both were overwhelming defeats and Coach Bezdek will have a tough time trying to shape pennant-winners out of his material. In contrast, the Oregon Aggles lost one game to Washington by an 18-20 score after the regular time had closed 18-18 and the other by a score of 15-24.

An Aggle enthusiast, who witnessed the first game at Seattle, says the Aggles deserved to win. The referee grabbed a foul basket from them just before time was called because the thrower had his bigtoe nail or a shoclaco, over the restraining line.

The Aggles, it is said, are not using the collegiate dribble as frequently as in past campaigns. The sudden change from the dribbling attack to the passing game may have been responsible for their slow start.
