George Dewey, a busky youth from Bellingham, Wash, enacted the role of the villain. Dewey attempted to pass a bogus check on a local department store, using a check blank from the Merchants' National Bank and the signature "George Hardy."

Department store officials smelled a mouse, however, and, as Dewey was a youthful appearing fellow, they telephoned the Juvenile Court for an officer. Doane is employed as a baliff in Judge Gatens' court during the Winter season and, as there were no detectives handy when the call came in, Walter volunteered.

He was promptly sworn in, given a Deputy Sheriff's star, and five minutes later Deane had his victim by the boat sleeve leading him down Sixth street, bound for the county bastile.

So there, Mr. Lee McQuillan, look to your laureis!

"There is one thing organized baseball will have to guard against," said John McGraw to me a few days ago at Havana, Cuba. "If the situation is not closely watched all the valuable players on the teams without good pennant chances will threaten to jump to the Federals in the hope that the league will consent to let them go to some stronger club in order to hold them. This would make the races on both circuits lopsided. I doubt if either the Lobert or Magee deals would have been made if this condition had not existed in their cases. Each wanted to leave the Phillies and this fact made the trades possible. Also, the league should mark such things as the Mann incident. If a player, when he is switched from a stronger to a weaker team, is going to jump, it will ruin a lot of deals. Each club should be forced to deliver the specified players in order to make the trade stand as arranged."

McGraw is right about this. The jumping of Tinker last year hurt the Brooklyn club. The deal was made and

McGraw is right about this. The jumping of Tinker last year hurt the Brooklyn club. The deal was made and the money paid, but his jump made it impossible to put it through. Now that Mann has left organized baseball, if this report is true Stallings will have to dig up someone clee to go to the Philadelphia club in Mann's place in payment for Magee, and in that way he will weaken his team. Of course, this is all water on the Glants' wheel as far as this goes, for we figure that

"The advantage is all with us now," commented Frank Patrick, owner of the Vancouver septet, after Tuesday night's game.

"However, the race is not over yet.
The Portland players are just as familiar with the Vancouver rink as my own men. Harris, Johnson and other Sams have played with Vancouver at various times. Harris was with me last year. I traded him to Portland during the Winter for Mallen, and I guess I got the worst of it, as Kenny hasn't been playing up to his oldtime
form."

Frank Patrick may not be in the best of condition, but as results go the Vancouver owner appears to be a bear of a defense player. Patrick jumped on the ice in the Vancouver-Victoria game at Victoria last week, and the champions did not net a goal after his entry. On top of this Vancouver held Portland scoroless here Tuesday, so that Patrick's record as one of the defensive units is untarnished as yet.
