Mr. Logan was first called upon to testify about a pamphlet which Mrs. Clark had written, in which she blamed J. F. Boothe, president of the Multnomah Bar Association, for the death of his own wife. Mr. Logan declared that few of the statements in the pamphlet were true, and that Mr. and Mrs. Boothe had seen each other frequently and had reseen each other frequently and had re-mained on good terms up to the time of her death last December.

Judge Cleeton asked Mr. Logan about the charge made by Mrs. Clark that Mr. Clark had entered into a conspiracy to obtain the divorce from her while she was under arrest on an insanity charge. Mr. Logan explained that Mrs. Clark gave her full consent to the pro-ceedings, and was in court when the agreement was reached and the decree granted. When Mr. McCusker took up the cross-examination of Mr. Logan he asked whether it was regarded as an evidence of insanity that Mrs. Clark should write and send telegrams to prominent National figures, such as Mrs. O. H. P. Belmont, Dr. Anna How-ard Shaw and others."

That chief credit for having been the original propagandist of the Celilo Canal, which will be opened with formal ceremonies May 5, should be given to E. E. Lytle, well-known Portland railroad man who built both the Co-lumbia Southern Railroad and the Pacific Railroad & Navigation Company's road to Tillamook, is the statement of Eastern Oregon people familiar with the early efforts to overcome transportation difficulties at Cellio.

It is stated that Mr. Lytle is the father of the Cellio Canal for it was by his efforts that the Cellio Portage Road was built and because of the service this short railway was to the people of the interior the Government saw the logic of building a canal for steamers around the Celllo rapids. "It was at the Legislative session of 1903," said one closely acquainted with Mr. Lytle's work for the portage road, "that the appropriation of $180,000 for the building of the portage road was finally secured after the project had been held up for ten sessions. "Mr. Lytle went to the Legislature the work could not be completed for $150,000 but Mr. Lytle overcame this argument by offering to make good
