LONDON, March 4.—Correspondents of the Associated Press—The French Pash, who has disposed of the main strength of the conquerors in the western theater, has now set the tide rolling in new Normandy, similar in every respect to the opening phase of the trench war in the Pas de Calais, and on the very outskirts of the capital of the world.

The French are in a unique situation.

They have been able to conduct their operations in the opening phase of the campaign without much opposition, and their advance is now at the point of the growth.

THE NEW BATTLEFIELD

The new battlefield is a strip of about 100 miles of French soil, lying between the English channel and the sea of Calais.

The French have been able to conduct their operations in the opening phase of the campaign without much opposition, and their advance is now at the point of the growth.
