"No, we cannot build houses and our house must be one that holds water." said the big fish. "I have a plan, and if you will agree to stay awake tonight and do as I tell you we may be able to have a house." "We will do anything you say." said his companions. "How long will we have to stay awake?" "Perhaps all night. Any way, it will be midnight before the fairles come down by the pond." said the big fish. When the fairles came to the pond that night they were surprised to see hundreds of heads sticking out of the water, and still more surprised when the big fish made known his strange request.

water, and still more surprised when the big fish made known his strange request. "We cannot do a thing for you our-selves," said the queen, "because you must have a house in the water, and we will see the gnomes and see what they can do for you. "Come here tomorrow night and we will tell you what they say." But the gnomes could do nothing, and the fairies went to the goblins. "We cannot work with water all around us," said the goblins. "If they want to live where it is damp but not all water we will see what we can do." So the fairies told the fishes what the goblins said, but that would not do.
