Death Toll in Carpathian Engagement Becomes Heavier Than Ever.

Hungarian Regiments Carry One Position Northwest of Uzsok and Enemy Defeats Austrians at Mezlaborcz, in Beskids.

LONDON, April 14—After a 12-hour battle the Russians have captured another section of the mountain barrier between Galicia and Hungary, while Hungarians have captured a Russian position northwest of Uzsok Post.

A dispatch from Lemberg, Galicia, tells of a Russian attack on the Austrian forces at Mezolaborcz, in the East Beskids. The Austrians were forced to give ground, and it is said the main mountain crest in this region, considered impregnable, has passed into the hands of the Russians.

This battle was an incident in a struggle of unusual severity now in progress along a front of more than 168 miles from Bartfeld, Northern Hungary, to Stry, Eastern Galicia.

Petrograd reports that both sides are attacking simultaneously and that the losses are heavy.

OBREGON'S FORCE CUT OFF

(Continued From First Page.) jor-General Frederick Funston, who arrived here today from San Antonio to take charge of the border situation croated by the siege of Matamoros, said hi coming was due to reports that the Villa army was arriving and that a crisis in the fighting might be expected soon. The day passed, however, with no bembardment of Matamoros.

Both the Carranza garrison and the Villa officers still assert that their oppenents lost several hundred killed in yesterday's sortie from Matamoros, ed that the killed on both sides did not

was still somewhat under the impression of reports sent to him on conditions on the firing line in Northern France, whereof I learned from another Seurce, and which illustrates somewhat the important role that the Pope plays aming the countries at war. Reports, coming to him of the terrible conditions on the front in North France, say that the dead are lying so thick in some places that they are a verifable wall of dead, poisoning the air.

The Pope took the initiative of suggestion of asking Germany if she would agree to two days censation of fighting on the prompt answer came from dead. The prompt answer came from the dead. The Pope also is co-operating with the exchange of wounded and civilians, and is working hard to secure the release and permission to return to their own countries of all interned civilians and that interning, which is contrary to the principals of international law be done away with. Consent to the agreement by Germany and Austria already has been secured.

The Pope appears to be firmly convinced that America is the country which should assume the role of peacemaker and that it could best make the efforts at the right moment with greater promise of results. He returned to that subject and said that aside from humanitarian motives, which sentiment is strong among the American people, America from self-interest should feel justified in making firm efforts in the direction of peace, because its commercial losses through the war must be great.

I remarked to the Pope that the role of neutral and peacemaker was rather thankless and he replied that he could not agree that the role of trying to make peace in the end would be thankless.

Some Good Frem Evil Hoped For.

There is much more life in and around his rooms on the first floor of the Vatican, with cardinals in striking red mantles, little red caps, in many instances, strong and intellectual faces, coming and going; callers running up and then dropping on one knee, kissing his hand.

The purple

The purple-mantied monsignors noiselessly moving about through red rooms and halls, make it a picturesque scene. Cardinal Gaspari is a delightscene. Cardinal Gaspari is a delightfully clever and courteous man, several years older than the Pope. His eyes beam good humor and his engaging smiles are much a part of his pleasing personality. His rooms are red walled and red carpeted. The room of the secretary of state has only a large flattopped desk and several chairs. He talked with great frankness about the war and peace, like the Pope.

He appeared to think that there was only one country which had the necessary influence and power to take up the question of peace with any prospect of success. That country was America.

Roll of Press Appreclated, He dwelt especially on the great role the press played in the matter of peace and hoped that the American press would throw its great influence and weight in the balance for an early peace.

My impression, with hundreds of thousands of Catholics in each of the principal warring countries, is that the principal warring countries, is that the Vatican is finding it not much less difficult to satisfy everybody than the United States.

One of my most treasured souvenirs will be the manuscript and that part of my audience and interview with Pope Benedict which is quoting his own words and the message to America. This was translated for the holy father in Italian and was edited and additions made to it by the Pope himself in his own handwriting.
