talk with virtually all the leading statesmen, including Count von Berchtold, ex-Foreign Minister, and Count

the slightest doubt regarding eventual success in the struggle. Although men

the substance of the replies to a series of questions regarding the responsibility of the war, its aims and objects from the Austro-Hungarian viewpoint and its effect on the internal relations and its effect on the internal relations of the dual menarchy.

Russia Blamed for War.

Responsibility for the war was put squarely on Russia, which for years, according to the views expressed, has been steadily working toward the destruction of the monarchy, using and encouraging Serbia as a "stalking horse" for this purpose.

The composite views of the statesmen are about as follows:

"The spark which kindled the war was, it is true, an incident of the saddest nature for us, but the incident represented merely the consequence of a series of deeds and activities a liming at the destruction of Austria-Hungary, Americans, who quite naturally paid Americans, who quite naturally paid little attention at an earlier date to the events in Central and Eastern Europe, saw the curtain go up only at the moment when a great power, Austria-Hungary, was about to call little Serbia to account. Their first impression was that of the misuse of our greater The situation in reality was

Russia determined to prevent this by proposing a conference at which Russia should appear as the advocate of Serbia so as to reduce our measures against Serbia to a scale which Russia had decided was permissible.

"The war is for us a war of self-defense and existence. For Russia the war is of conquest. Russia always pursues far-reaching plans. She desires domination or a protectorate over all the Slav peoples and in addition, since the days of Peter the Great, has aimed at Constantinople.

Everyone in both states realizes that the people are bound together for life or death. The questions, too, which ex. Eight months of war also have proved that we know how to fight and that the soldiers of all nationalities have learned to esteem the valor of their comrades. Our troops, it is generally recognized, fight with splendid courage and unshakable obstinacy,

"We hope that Americans will come to see more and more what sort of struggle we are waging. Austria-Hungary is by nature that which the United States has gradually become although not to such an extent, by immigration, namely, an entity composed of many races, which nevertheless wish to preserve their nationality and individuality. At the same time all would suffer if torn asunder.

"Emigration in the next few years presumably will fall off, because the work to be done after the war will require at home many of the hands which now seek employment across the ocean. Our relations with the United States undoubtedly will show steady growth. Shipping communication will be more frequent and our commerce will grow, because it is to be assumed that after the war Austria-Hungary will experience a period of powerful economic development."

Do not make a mistake and think that because we have priced them so reasonably they are not all they should be. An inspection of the lot will be an agreeable surprise to you, as they are certainly greater value than you ever dreamed of getting for the prices asked. Out-of-town buyers, write for description of any of them.
