BY LEONE CASS BAER.

Once upon a time a girly-girly musical comedy with two really genuine stars at its head closed a week's engagement in Scattle and hied its way to Portland to open another week's engagement on its way to the Panama-Pacific Exposition. But the best-laid Pacific Exposition. But the best-laid plans of not only mice and men, but property mogula also, gaing aft agley, and while the company of several dozen souls slumbered peacefully, if souls can slumber peacefully on that trip between Scattle and here, the property man in the theater back in Scattle was trying to figure out how on earth he was nine trunks ahead of the game. Wardrobes Lost With Trunks,

In the trunks were more or less care-ily packed the various stage trap-ngs of nine principals in "The Candy hop." Ten years from now, with an exceptance system, the trunks could be brought over in as many minutes, ut not so today. So "The Candy Shop" but not so today. So "The Candy Shop" folk had to borrow things from each other, ransack costume houses and get together enough apparel at least to be consistent with the characters they played. If it had been the chorus that had lost its trunks no one could tell the difference, and it wouldn't have made any noticeable difference. The wardrobes of chorus coryphees are mainly conspicuous by their absence. But Miss Fulton's dresses were made mainly conspicuous by their absence.
