THE doctrine of cleanliness is slowly but surely making its way in the world. It may or it may not be true that "cleanliness is next to godilness," but however that may be, the Individual, and the community, and the city that "gets next" is by far the best off, socially, merally and healthwise. It is difficult to figure out just what relation dirt sustains to sickness, but yet there is a feeling in the minds of most people that dirt and filth go hand most people that dirt and filth go hand in hand with 'disease. So it does. Havelock Ellis is author of a statement that the first step toward lowerin the death rate of a city is the removal of its gross filth. A few centuries ago, when "black death" was epidemic in London, Parliament set aside a special day for fasting and prayer to check this dreadful disease. Lord Pemberton told the citizens that their prayers would stand a better their prayers would stand a better chance of being answered if each man again. What is the use of washing the face several times a day to keep it presentable? It is dirty again tomorrow. What's the use? What is the use of washing the hands? They certainly do get frightfully dirty by tomorrow. Some people ask what is the use of cleaning up the city, for it will get dirty soon again. I have answered the questions by asking some others. Those who do not wash their hands and face belong to the "don't-care" brigade. Such persons are unwholesome to have about. Those who object to keeping yards and vacant lots clean belong to the "don't-care" crowd.

Those who "don't care" have more clean belong to the "don't-care" crowd. Those who "don't care" have more sickness because they don't care, and they pass it on to those who do care. This is the proper time now for neighborhoods to form "help-me, help-you, everybody-help" clubs and get the rubbish and tin cans out of vacant lots. Old tin cans with particles of food in them, together with standing water, are unwholesome to have about. Clean-up week is a good thing, even if the results are not lasting. This will lead some to clean up several times during the year. It makes the second cleaning up much easier. This second cleaning up much easier. This thorough cleaning makes your neighbor's yard look as though it needed cleaning up. We are influenced much in this world by contrasts. People who are habitually dirty in

"Very well," said her father. "I will wait until you find such a man, but do not put it off too long."
