Major Moraht declares that the Russians, with their capacity in men, will set a boundary as soon as possible to the advance of the Teutons, but that the "Teutons can cherish the justifiable doubt whether at this moment the Russian army has in other places troops which it can bring up without damage to its other fronts."

"The coming days will show," Major

"The coming days will show," Major Moraht says, "whether the Austro-Germans have set sufficient troops in motion to carry through a long-winded pursuit and whether the Russians in Galicia will continue to send up capa-ble reserves."

Grand "Breaking Through" Unlikely. Discussing the fighting near Ypres. Major Moraht says:

There is no question here of breaking through on a grand scale, nor of pressing back an enemy, who, owing to the long front he occupies, cannot construct sufficient echelons in his rear. The English battle area is densely occupied by troops and one position lies behind another.

"Supplies of all army requisites lie near the front and permit of the fight-ing fronts being supported in the short-est time at every point. We should est time at every point. We should in this northern war, therefore, ex-pect for the present no really decisive successes, but one daily success followanother will not fall to produce

Minister of Finance, addressing the Chamber of Deputies today on the financial situation, concluded his speech with these words:

"The complete unity with all parties and with all quarrels put aside we swear to pursue by every means and until victory the end we have in view."

The entire chamber was on its feet in an instant and acclaimed the orator frantically. The credite asked for by the Minister of Finance were voted unanimously.

In explaining the financial situation of the country, M. Ribot said that the deficit at the end of April was 1,500,000,000 francs ($300,000,000), while the public up to the end of April had taken 1,200,000,000 francs ($240,000,000) in national defense bonds.
