LAW OF 1789 INVOKED. PLEA MADE FOR TRIAL OF INDIAN IN COUNTY OF CRIME COMMISSION. Jim George Up Second Time for Murder of Peter Brown—Death May Be Penalty in Federal Court.

I. R. Webster, as attorney for Jim George, an Indian, indicted for the murder in the first degree of Peter Brown on February 22, 1914, when the case came up for its second trial Wednesday before Federal Judge Wolverson, invoked an old Federal statute, enacted September 24, 1789, which provides that trial for offenses punishable with death shall be held in the county where the offense was committed when this can be done without great inconvenience.

Mr. Webster asked that George's trial be held in Klamath Falls, Brown having been killed in Klamath County, Pennsylvania, on a charge of treason. The second was in 1820, in a case against a man indicted for murder in a United States fort. In both cases the application to have the trial held in the county where it was committed was denied.

Judge Wolverson took the case under advisement after listening to arguments yesterday. Mr. Webster's point has raised a serious question as to whether United States court has a right to hold at any place other than those specifically provided by law.

Another interesting point is that this is the first murder case to arise since the adoption of the state constitutional amendment last November abolishing the death penalty. Of course, this amendment is not binding on a Federal court, but the interesting situation is presented of first degree murder in the state being punishable by death in the Federal court.

WHO'S GEO. H. MCARTHY.—Adv. The records show that the statute called up by Attorney Webster has been invoked only twice before. The first occasion was in 1789, in the case of United States versus Fries, in Pennsylvania, on a charge of treason. The second was in 1820, in a case against a man indicted for murder in a United States fort. In both cases the application to have the trial held in the county where it was committed was denied.
