Tiny Actress Captivates Audience in "Bootle's Baby," Orpheum Has Mirth-Provoker and Sunset Runs Censored Movie.

Betty Nansen as Katusha in Tolstol's A Woman's Resurrection" is having successful week at the Majestic There is a pathetic fascination about Tolstoi's great play that is well main tained in William Fox's presentation Pretty little Katusha, the ward of Prince Dimitri's aunt and the clandes tine sweetheart of the Prince, flees from the only home she has ever known, to hide herself in the city, Petrograd.

Later she is sentenced to the mines of Siberia, having been unjustly con-victed by a jury of which Dimitri is a mamber. Remorse comes to the Prince with the realization that he was the cause of Katusha's downfall, and with splendid self-abnegation he sets about to effect her spiritual resurrection There is in the drama intense human interest and a sweet pathos that arouses emotion.

Art Smith's remarkable flights at the exposition, and "The Rivals," a cute "kid" comedy, are other interesting
