AS LEADBETTER PASSED DOWN Front street, the extinguisher became more and more heavy. Finally he was forced to set it down for a moment and mop his brow. The day was warm. When he picked it up, he disregarded the sign, and lifted it with the wrong side up. Automatically, the extinguisher began its function of extinguishing, pouring through the red-house attachment a volume of gas-charged fluid.

WILDLY THE MAN ENDEAVORED TO stop the flow, to no avail. As a last resort, he stuffed the hose into his coat pocket and rushed into the nearest pawn shop.

"What yuh gimme for this fire-fighter?" he inquired. He took the hose from his pocket as he did so, and the surrounding area, including the pawnshop man, was sprayed thoroughly. At that moment Officers Lillis and Wagner, who had been attracted by the still-active extinguisher, placed him under arrest. He received a suspended sentence.
