

JOY MARKS END OF GREATEST FESTIVAL

Trumpets and Noise of Big Night Crowds Usher Out Fete for Year.

STREETS ARE CONGESTED

Hotels and Grills Are Filled to Overflowing With Happiest Folk and Gay Laugh Noted on Faces of Thousands.

Buried under millions of fragrant roses, the festival spirit was tucked away last night to remain hidden for another year.

The festival spirit died at midnight, but throughout the coming months Portland roses will stand for the memory of the departed fete and in prospect of another even more brilliant one to come with the buds and blossoms of another Spring.

Right merrily the crowds helped speed the departing spirit on its way last night. Through jammed the downtown streets, joined in the carnival that marked the last night of the fete, and revelled in joyous abandon as the festival drew to its close.

At the festival center the gaiety reached its height. Dancers circled and swayed on the pavements to the music of bands that poured forth their melodies almost without ceasing.

The pavement had been waxed for last night's dancing, the perfect weather permitting a smoother surface, and the tripping couples were insistent upon encores for every number.

Great crowds poured through the flower gardens that have been made of the park blocks, admiring the beauty of the floral display and enjoying the music.

After the parade thousands swooped down upon the grills and hotels, and a carnival air prevailed in all parts of the downtown district.

Noise was an essential for the crowds. The streets rang with noise-making, in which cowbells and other discordant instruments added and abated the revelry.

Serentine strips of colored paper hung from the air and fell on the heads of the passers-by. It was as if New Year's Eve had come again, and the whole city resounded from the activities of the celebrants.

Music was everywhere. The Cherrians Band, of Salem, was among the numerous ones that dispensed lively tunes on the downtown streets and serenaded the newspaper offices, various clubs and other organizations.

Next Year's Job Hard One. Last night's revel marked the close of what is considered probably the most successful Rose Festival in Portland's history.

Starting with the children's parade on Monday, the floral parade of the day following and the industrial and fraternal parade of yesterday morning, the gorgeous spectacle last night brought to a fitting end and climaxed the ninth and most noteworthy of the series that has made Portland's hospitality known far and wide.

The streets presented scenes of the utmost animation until midnight. Great crowds made their way to the festival center and joined in the dancing. So popular was this feature that the three block lengths of pavement was in use to its utmost capacity by the whirling couples.

Although it took on added activity last night, the festival was a lively place yesterday afternoon. The Harmony and Sellwood choral clubs combined, Ella Hoberg Tripp conductor, gave a concert there at 2:30 consisting of choruses and specialties.

The Veterans' Quartet and Chorus was heard at the same place at 3:30. Campbell's Band assisted in the different numbers. At 4:30 the Amphion Male Chorus, Jasper Dean MacFarlane director, gave a choral concert.

The list of track events shows entries from 15 states and the District of Columbia. Among those represented are Texas, Arizona and Washington.

At noon the Ad Club Quartet sang at the downtown hotels. Last night there were band concerts at the same hotels.

Blackfoot Indians from the Glacier National Park carried out tribal ceremonies and dancing at their camp in the Park Blocks in the afternoon instead of last night, as programmed.

The festival spirit that tripped Portland's streets last night and joined in the revels in honor of Queen Sybil and her court will come again with the return of each recurring Springtide.
