2 SUSPECTS IN CAR HOLD-UP TRY DASH
Men Arrested Pending Probe of Robbery of Oregon City Train Make Break.

AUTO DRIVER PAID IN DIMES
P. W. Bigelow and Victor Manwaller Recaptured After Chase for Several Blocks—Woman on Street Hysterical at Shots.

Arrested as suspects in connection with the Oregon City interurban train holdup Sunday night, two men made a dash for liberty just as they arrived at the Courthouse late yesterday. Deputy Constable McCullough was forced to fire three shots to stop one of them. The other was captured and overpowered by Deputy Constable Nicholson.

One of the men said his name was Harry Reed. Later he told the officers his true name was Victor Manwaller. The other gave the name of P. W. Bigelow. Both are held in the County Jail pending further investigation.

Lou Wagner, special agent of the Portland Railway, Light & Power Company, last night could not positively identify the men as the two who held up the train. Their actions, unexplained to the satisfaction of officers, are being made the subject of a rigid investigation.

Payment in Change Reported.
Tom P. Cowing, automobile driver for the county, was hailed by Manwaller and Bigelow yesterday morning near Fairview. The men asked to be taken to Portland, or to the end of a carline. When they arrived at the end of the Rose City Park carline, Cowing stopped his machine. They told him to go on.

At Twenty-eighth street and Sandy boulevard the men got out. They paid Cowing $1 in nickels and dimes, which aroused the driver's suspicion. Manwaller gave Cowing 15 cents extra "to buy a cigar with."

Cowing reported the actions of the two men to Deputy Constable Nicholson, who, with Deputy McCullough, started to search for the pair of suspects. They were found in a rooming-house at Grand avenue and Stark streets, put in the automobile, and taken to the Courthouse.

Dash for Freedom Made.
No sooner had Cowing stopped his car at the Fourth-street entrance than both men leaped to the ground and made a dash for liberty, one running in each direction.

Bigelow turned up Salmon street and north on Fifth street, hotly pursued by Deputy McCullough. The street was clear of vehicles and pedestrians and he seized his revolver and fired at the fleeing man. This created some excitement.

A woman who was pushing a baby carriage along Fifth street, near the officer, became hysterical. The carriage tipped over and the baby fell out. The mother rushed into the street and flung herself on the officer.

"Don't kill my baby! Don't kill my baby!" she screamed. Meanwhile the child, unharmed, was smiling innocently at the performance.

Policeman Stops Flight.
Bigelow's dash down the street was halted in front of the Art Museum at Fifth and Taylor streets. There he collided with a policeman, whose name, in the excitement, was not learned. The policeman and the suspect both went down, and for a brief period struggled desperately in the street. Then Bigelow was overpowered.

Meanwhile Manwaller had tried a dash through the Plaza block, across Fourth street from the Courthouse. When he tried to hurdle the chain fence his foot caught and he went sprawling. Before he regained his feet, Deputy Constable Nicholson, 200 pounds descended on him and he was pinned to earth.

At the County Jail the two men are said to have told conflicting stories, contradicting themselves on many points. At first they denied being near Fairview yesterday morning, but when confronted by Cowing, they admitted it. They declared they walked there from the end of the Montavilla line after 9 o'clock yesterday morning.

Clockmakers Officials at Work.
Special Agent Wagner and City Detectives Tichenor and Leonard tried to identify the men, but were not able to do so last night. Mr. Lipman, up to the time of the arrest of Bigelow and Manwaller, had been working on another clue as to the identity of one of the holdup men. Sheriff Wilson and Constable Frost, of Oregon City, scoured the vicinity of the holdup near Glen Echo station yesterday morning. Deputy Sheriff Phillips, Lou Wagner, J. Roach and W. P. Lillis, special agents of the streetcar company, also visited the scene of the robbery.

Mr. Wagner said last night he had not been able to get accurate figures as to the amount of loot carried away by the robbers, but did not believe it would reach $100.

Mr. Wagner did not cease his efforts on other clues with the arrest of Manwaller and Bigelow yesterday, and intimated that another arrest might be expected this morning.

DINNER-DANCE FAVORED
BUSINESS MEN ASK REMOVAL OF BAN ON ENTERTAINMENT.

Amusement Suggested as Method to Keep Tourists in Portland Who Now Go Elsewhere.

Dancing at meals may become a fad in the dining-rooms of Portland's principal hotels as it now is in many other cities. A delegation of business men, headed by Will Lipman and J. C. English, yesterday held a conference with the City Council at which the Council was urged to amend the present dancing ordinance so that the dining-room dances will be permitted.

It is declared that Portland is losing a vast amount of tourist business by its prohibition of dining-room dancing. It is said the visitors who are used to the entertainment in the East hurry away from Portland because they want to dance. They rush on to Seattle or other cities where they can mix a fox trot in with their meals. Business men declare that, as a result of this ban, by which Portland gets, the city is losing thousands of dollars a year.

"The dances are permitted in all the principal cities, and Mr. Lipman at yesterday's meeting. "There is nothing wrong with it. It is a fad. There are fashionable gowns worn at the dancing
