her rudder the Great Northern Pacific liner Northern Pacific, which was dis-

Meanwhile the Shaver Transportation Company was requested by officials of the Great Northern Pacific Steamship Company for an additional towboat and the steamer Shaver was started from here.

Drydeck is Being Repaired.

The Port of Portland drydeck at St. The Port of Portland dryde The Port of Portland drydock at St. Johns being under repairs it is impossible to lift the big liner there. The Port of Portland Commission recently awarded a contract for the rebuilding of the wings of the five pontoons and one pontoon has been removed for that work, leaving only four, which E. W. Wright, manager of the Port, says would be insufficient for such a task. "It is unfortunate that the Northern Pacific met with trouble and especially at this time, because the dock is not available for a steamer of her dimensions," said Mr. Wright. "The present period was selected for repairs to the dock as it is the most quiet of the dock

The case is the result of a collision at Astoria between the Thielbek, in the this time, because the dock is not available for a steamer of her dimensions," said Mr. Wright. "The present period was selected for repairs to the dock as it is the most quiet of the dock as it is the most quiet of the dock as it is the most quiet of the year and the aim was to have dock in condition for all vessels when the shipping season is on in full blast. The dock has been in service since 1903, and this is the first time it has been overhauled. By keeping four pontoons in service we can raise such ships as the Mackinaw, which goes on tomorrow, but bar was in no way to blame for the ac-cident. The Northern-Pacific is said to have been drawing 22 feet at the time. She was crossing in at 1:10 o'clock in the afternoon, says a message from North Head, and high water was at 2:27 o'clock, with a tide of 6.8

Captain Al Hunter was making his first trip on the vessel, having succeeded Captain Ahman, who is to command the Great Northern, which he brought from the East and remained master of until the retirement of Captain Lapraik from the Northern Pacific. Captain Charles Lundquist, the plaintiff went on board the vessel to sell some fish. regular pilot, was handling the vessel.

The complaint avers that a slingload of lumber, being swung in from the dock by the steamer's derrick, caused Beaver Pauses at Sea to Receive One of Chicago's Crew.

Responding to a wireless request from the master of the halibut steamer Chicago, that he take off a fisherman named Peterson, who suffered from a named Peterson, who suffered from a dangerous growth on his face that it was feared might affect his eyesight, Captain Mason, of the "Big Three" flagship Beaver, ran close to the Chicago off Yaquina Head at 9:30 o'clock Tuesday night and Peterson went aboard in a small boat from the Chicago. Dr. Mitchell, a passenger on the Beaver, treated Peterson so that he was Beaver, treated Peterson so that he was able to proceed to Seattle when the Beaver arrived here at 2:30 o'clock yes-terday. That fishing is good in that vicinity is attested to by Peterson, who said that the Chicago has made her last run from Seattle to the Yaquina Banks and return in 5 days and 15 hours, catching in that time 150 tons

The Beaver brought 250 passengers, only 20 of whom were in the steerage. Among her guests was Captain Jor don, a veteran San Francisco bar pilot, who for 35 years has acted as cicerone at the Golden Gate. A. J. Hall, traveling auditor for the California Fruit Canners' Association, was a passenger
