was unable to tuck away his first game in the city circuit. Poor headwork on the bases on at least two occasions was partly responsible for the Sellwood Work on Bases Poor.

On two occasions men were half way to the next base on a fly to the out-field, and it would have meant two scores at least for Sellwood had they used judgment and waited until the was caught, as they would have ample time to gallop over the platter.

The second game started out like a pitchers' battle. Both twirlers let their opponents down one, two, three for three innings. Then the Monarchs elipped over two tallies on a hit and two errors. This did not seem to feaze the Redmen, however, as they put over one run in their half and two more in one run in their hair and two more in the fifth inning. At this juncture Murphy showed signs of weakening and Chet Hughes snagged a double off his delivery in the sixth, but the Reds could not get enough hits to make a run in that canto. Four tallies each in the seventh and eighth frames gave Monarcha Have Off Day.

Rupert's crew made their extra bell-ringer in the first of the ninth when Lund allowed a walk and two bingles

The Monarchs seemed to have an off The Monarchs seemed to have an off day all around. The twirling of Luna seemed to have them mystified. They were unable to connect with the delivery of the big fiery-domed flinger. Wolfer was in the lineup, despite the fact that it had been reported during the week that he had left for Montana. The Lodell on first was not Ai, but a younger brother of the ex-Fendleton manager.

A good-sized crowd was on hand to welcome the boys back to the Vaughn-street hattlements. Next week the Ma-roons will play the Monarchs, while the East Siders are taking on the Sell-The scores:

THE MONDAY CRAWFISH. "It Never Crabs." Monday, June 21, 1915,

DEAN COLLINS, Editor.

EDITORIAL

In the face of the agitation for "armed preparedness." The Crawfish (while preserving its atrict neutrality as between the advocates of heavy armaments and those who regard "I Didn't Raise My Boy to Be a Soldier" as one of the modern-day classics) desires to call attention to some of the grand traditions of our Fair Land.

There is the tradition of Lexington and New Orleans, when the hardy Americans, unskilled in military tactics but unquestionably humdingers when it came to shooting muskrats and gray diggers in our wild frontiers, put it over the hireling cohorts of the enemy in more ways than we have space to mention. This tradition still lives, and The Crawfish has it straight from several curbstone authorities, that, while we still have a tradition like that hanging up siongside the "God Bless Our Home" and the steel engraving of the "Reading from Homer," this Land of Liberty has little need of military preparation.

We are reliably informed by these same authorities that in case a foreign foe set foot upon our shores a million of our hardy sons, trained to expert marksmanship through generations of Kelly pool and inured to stress through the tedium of holding down the cushions on our interurban car lines, would spring to arms and sweep the enemy into the sea.

And a short time ago we got hold of a Springfield riffe and found ourselves completely baffled as to which doeflicker one has to shove to load the hally thing; and finally we got the bolt pulled out by accident slon, were features of the week in the major league races.

Both these teams now occupy well-entrenched first division places, the cardinals in particular being in a position where they are likely to give the leaders serious trouble if they keep up anything like their recent good work.

While St. Louis has been climbing, the Chicago team has shown no signs of faitering, and, in fact, by winning four out of five games during the week, pushed the Philadelphias out of first Bostons while the Philadelphias were losing to Cincinnati, drove Pat Moran's team down another notch, the Cardinals advancing to second place.

Two pronounced losing streaks were developed during the week, both the Bostons and the Brooklyns dropping five out of six games.

The American League situation grows increasingly interesting. Even St. Louis, which dropped at a fast rate by losing six straight games, ralled today and beat Detroit, which had to surrender second position during the week to the speeding Bostons. The Tigers are now only three games ahead of the Yankees. George L. Baker was elected Commissioner the other day in the official count but he didn't seem to take a great deal of interest in it, for we didn't see him pacing the floor outside any, while the official count
