health "the first and chief possession of man and the ultilimate promise of the world redeemed." Dr. Snyder said:

"Soul's Fate Depends on Body."

The soul is held to be the chief part of man, that which lifts him above the brutes that perish and links him with the divine source of life. Yet in the dely existence which we really know and experience, in the period we call life, it is the body alone which gives us entity; it is the state of the body that determines very largely the bent of the mind, and, so far as human of the mind, and, so far as human influence is concerned, the fate of the soul.

some perversion or disturbance of the sensible than for girls to wear these styles.

He also declared that the trend of modern times should be to keep people well rather than to get them well. Dr. Willard said:

The savages of Central Africa wear rings in their noses because it is the fashion. In America high-heeled shoes are worn for the same reason. It is a question which causes the greatest deviation from gracefulness. There is no question which causes the greatest injury to body structure, especially in the case of girls. The savages have the best of it.

"The Chinese pay their physicians when they are well. When sickness comes the physicians pay stops. In principle that is ideal. The great trend of modern thought as regards health is not how to get people well, but how to prevent them from getting sick.

DEAN COLLINS, Editor, EDITORIAL

We decided a number of years ago that Nature, instead of being the wise and beneficent character she is generally believed to be, was in many cases as incompetent as a newly imported housemaid who sweeps things under the rug and uses your rator to peel potatoes with. Nature, however, has put it over on humanity so long that only a few advanced thinkers like us and Emma Goldman and Rex Lampman and Frank Coulter (and at times Alf Cridge and Hen, Wagnon) have ever really become wise to her shortcomings.

shortcomings.

The editor of The Crawfish, moved by a sense of chivalry, had intended not to expose Nature, even when she plantd a family of green aphides on one of his rosebusnes and turned a big green worm loose to forage on his sweet pea hedge.

But Nature has gone further than that. She has discriminated against the great mass of the people for the benefit of a priviloged few in the past month, and although that privileged few includes one of our personal friends, we feel that it is time for us to sound a trumpet note of warning and call the attention of the people to her mispelsevor.

For almost ever since we can remember, the captious scather experts have been announcing periodically that the rainfall for the month, or the year, was be-low the average. We have seen Ed Heals make that statement over his own signature many a over his own signature many at time.

And now Nature, catering to the clamor of this privileged few, has provided not only enough but more than enough rain, according to their own schedules, quite regardless of the vast population of the city that has been paying for the privilege of sprinkling since the first of June and hasn't gotten a fair chance at the hose yet this season.

The Crawfish makes this fact public not with the intention of appearing unfriendly to Nature, but to awaken the American people to the realization that special privilege is ever trying to get a whack at them from a new angle and that eternal vigliance is clamoring in vain for exercise in this particular case.
