LETTER TELLS OF WAR

FORMER PORTLAND CONDUCTOR WRITES FROM DARDANELLES.

"President Wilson seems to have made a mistake with 'Too Proud to Fight' Speech," is the opinion.

War conditions in the Dardanelles are pictured in a letter just received in this city by John Ditchburn, attorney, from his nephew, John Crichton, former Portland streetcar conductor.

The letter, dated June 28, has no postage stamp, but is inscribed: "First Australian Division Field Postoffice, and near it is this significant message: 'Passed, 638, Censor.' The pages have been mutilated by the censors."

"I am resting in the trenches just at present," writes Mr. Crichton. "We are not allowed to put too much in our letters, as the censorship is pretty strict. As you know, the Australians have raised particular in this neck of the woods. We are looking forward to another tea party, with bayonets for spoons. I am newly back of the trenches, before another spell of dirty work, providing Johnny Truk gathers up enough sand to try to drive us into the sea."

"President Wilson seems to have made a mistake with his 'I'm too proud to fight' speech."

"If you could send me a copy of The Oregonian now and again, I would be tickled for I like to think of Portland. By the way, we've got, or rather had, two Oregon men in our outfit here. One of them, Chambers, got laid out with a bullet when we landed, and he was blown to pieces. Part of that shell smashed my rifle. The other soldier from the Pacific Coast is a Seattle man, but he put in some time in Portland. Chambers was a former North Bank railroad man."

"I guess everything in Portland is going along pretty well, in spite of the fact that Oregon has done 'dry.' You would die laughing if you saw me, for I have not had a shave for a month."

Mr. Crichton, when he was a student in this city for two years, up to August, 1914, was a conductor on an Alberta trolley car, and made his headquarters at the Piedmont car barn. He was born near London, England, and last August was a student in Melbourne, Australia, where he joined the Australian army. Mr. Crichton is a cousin of Ann Swinburne, the actress and American light opera star.
