Ancient Prison Ship Success Astonishes Seamen.

PUBLIC ASKED TOMORROW

Relics of Past Age of Cruelty Will Exhibited and Explained Guides When Ship Is Opened to Visitors.

Except for "no smoking" signs and others above the cell doors to denote the penal habitat of the "Kelly gang." or those of equal note in the history of the floating bastile, not a brush of paint to hide the scars has been used below deck on the British prison ship Success, which is berthed at the foot of Yamhill street, where she arrived at a o'clock yesterday afternoon in tow of the steamer Shaver. The ship is being gone over by her crew and will be open to the public at noon tomorrow. Captain Smith says that thereafter visiting hours will be from 3 o'clock each morning until 18 o'clock at night.

Gaily bedecked in signal flags, her sails furied, so no sign is shown of the tell-tale arrows denoting she belonged to the British prison fleet, and the men engaged in getting things shipshape, the Success offered little for sightseers crowded on the docks yesterday, other than might draw them to almost any other ancient hulk. But to hear the history of the piles of chains strewn about, iron balls weighing 12 pounds, the triangle flogging station, original windiass that undoubtedly was responsible for original chanties, and a host of additional souvenirs, would take them back into what must have really been dark ages so far as the men who had to do with the ship and her motley crowd were concerned.

Guides Will Explain. motley crowd were concerned.

Guldes Will Explain. And the impressions are heightened the unceasing flow of oratory from a guides. Captain Smith has 19 of the guides. Captain Smith has 19 of them, and during the exhibition hours each will be in uniform and well "brushed up" mentally, so they reel off the story of each wax figure as readily as though they were eyewitnesses of crimes and conditions that existed before they were born. First Officer E. W. Nottingham and Second Officer Robert Oidman are certainly far from being novices as "spielera."
