DOMESTIC SCIENCE BY LILIAN TINGLE.

HERMISTON, Or., July 28.—Will you please publish a recipe for pressed chicken, and also one for peach cobbler. Thanks very much. L. TINGLE.

PRESSED chicken. Dress, clean and cut up a large fowl. "Meatiness" is more important than tenderness in this case. Put into a pan with two large slices of onion, a bit of celery, or half a teaspoonful of celery seed tied in a bit of cheesecloth, and about two inches of very thin-cut lemon rind, yellow on both sides. Add boiling water barely to cover and one teaspoonful lemon juice. Simmer slowly (the slowness is important) on the back of the stove, or on a gas burner, or in an oven, or fireless cooker, until the meat is tender and falling from the bones. Rapid boiling will make the meat stringy instead of tender, even when it "falls from the bones." When half cooked, add one half tablespoonful salt. Free the tender, cooked meat from all skin and bones. Leave the stock in the pan and reduce by rapid boiling to about one cup. Strain it, remove the fat and season to taste with salt, a few grains of cayenne, if liked, and a few drops of lemon juice, if needed. Season the meat; decorate the bottom of a mould with sliced egg, or sliced stuffed olives, or peas, and pack the stock over and put a plate or board with a weight on top of the mould. A breadtin makes a good mould if a fancy one is not available. It is not available. Keep in a cool place until firm. In warm weather add 1 teaspoonful gelatine, soaked and dissolved over hot water, to the strained stock. If preferred, the stock may be stirred into the chicken meat before it is packed instead of being poured in. Some Southern cooks like to add a strip of fine flavored lean ham or tongue to the cooked chicken meat. Others mix chopped egg or olives with the chicken.

Peach cobbler. Peel and halve ripe peaches. Fill a deep earthen baking dish with them, sprinkle them with sugar according to their degree of sweetness, and adding a little water to prevent burning. Cover with a sheet of very light, rich biscuit crust, or strawberry shortcake crust, or a richer light short or flakey pastry, if preferred. Most people prefer the biscuit or shortcake crust to regular pastry. If the latter is used, it must be very light and thicker than for ordinary pie. Wet and pinch the edges, glaze with milk, make cuts or pricks for the escape of steam; bake until the crust is well browned, and the peaches tender. Serve, hot or cold, with plenty of cream. Let me know if you wanted details for making the crust and if so, what kind of crust.
